The Grant family's Century Farm near Morrisville has an intriguing backstory: The farmhouse formerly served as a "sick house" in the early part of the 20th century when flu was ravaging the country, and in the 1950s, the farm was the first in southwest Missouri to have a pole barn built.

The shadow of an old silo

A plain, hollow concrete pillar, my neighbor's old silo casts a long shadow over their farm, no matter the location of the sun.

Like the turn-of-the-century farmhouse at the heart of their modernized home and the wrought-iron fence bordering the front yard, it stands as mute reminder of the glory days of Allie and Bill Tucker's farm on Buffalo Head Prairie.

Their silo is just one of hundreds or thousands of such monuments on old Ozarks farms, reminders of a fast-fading past where clusters of suburban homes and shopping centers now sprawl across acres once rippling with wheat, corn or native grasses, fields where doe-eyed Jerseys, golden spotted Guernseys or big, black and white Holstein milk cows once grazed on rank pasture grasses and legumes.

Often, in the shadow of those new homes and shops, little grade A dairy barns cower like shy kittens and dark haylofts cast their vacant stares from old oak barns.

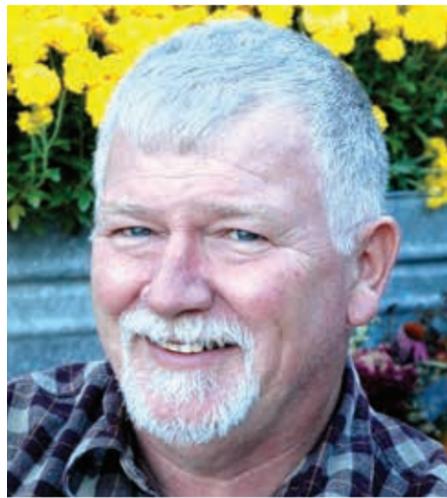

Though long ago abandoned to the buzzards on its brow, I can imagine the old silo near my house being filled with corn silage, a John Deere tractor popping in with a wagonload of freshly chopped roughage. I hear voices of farmhands under the drone of motors and blowers, and I smell the sweet fragrance of green silage wafting on a late summer breeze.

Unlike the infamous "blue tombstones" of latter-day dairies, the old silo south and east of my house stands as a memorial to generations of McPheeters, Tucker and Price descendants farming the place since 1898. For years the Price Farm was more than a mile outside of Buffalo, once including properties now home to Buffalo Prairie Middle School and the Cash Saver grocery. To the west it still reaches as far as the first corner of Truman Road. It's a big place, by Ozarks standards, and remains a farm, thanks to the Price descendants, with fields rented for both crops and cattle pasture, as well as acres set aside for wildlife management.

Throughout much of the Ozarks, though, families have not been so diligent in retaining the rural agrarian culture of their inheritance. I love seeing black feeder calves grazing in the shadow of the Prices' old silo; I love hearing coyotes yipping along a distant fence line and watching deer cross the road by the little creek east of the house. Fields of soybeans and big, round hay bales offer further testimony to the family's devotion to preserving their heritage.

I am profoundly thankful. It makes my 5-acre corner of Buffalo Head Prairie a better place to live.

Add to their land use choices the continued crop and hay production of neighboring fields to my east, rather than commercial development, and I am doubly thankful. I know, with the city limits within earshot, we will not forever be spared urban development here.

But, I am thankful for the time being, at least, that old silo casts its figurative shadow over me, as well. Where others of its ilk yet stand, whether over a golf course like that near Bolivar or on the farm park in southwest Springfield, I hope folks take time to notice the long shadows they cast, as well, whether living farm monuments or memorials to days gone by.

The Duke, 15 feet tall

Mickey Baker has owned The Strand — our local movie theater — since the new releases starred Virginia Mayo. The Strand, naturally, is an icon here. More than a few of our long-lasting marriages in the area began with a first date there. Most of us have consumed more than our share of Raisinets and Jujubes while watching Duke Wayne whip the bad guys. We know every inch of The Strand. We know where the rips are in the used-to-be blood-red carpet, which of the seats don't fold all the way down, which seats are most secluded in case it's a smooching date. It was ol' Dud, back when he was about 4 feet tall, who discovered how to combine chewing gum and the lock on the back door to provide five-finger discounts for friends wanting to watch Victor Mature run around in a loincloth. The Strand, in other words, is a vital part of our past, if not of our lives today.

We seem to just go rent those tapes and discs now and stay home and watch the newer films when we feel like it, and that might be because we now appreciate being able to stop the action for an occasional bathroom break now and then.

Mickey now thinks he has the answer. He bought a disc player thingy that works on a big screen. Then he bought some old movies and lowered the price.

The first night he did this was a triple header, and we all turned out to see our old heroes vanquish Nazis, solve the bank robbery in Cactus Gulch, and find out who really killed the big-city mayor. We paid too much for popcorn, but who cares?

The Strand lives on, even if there is more gray hair there than at a Percheron horse show. Besides, when was the last time you saw The Duke standing 15 feet tall?

Cowboy poets congregate

Cowboy poet supper

The 25th anniversary of the Missouri Cowboy Poets Association was celebrated Saturday, Sept. 25, at Richard and Laurel Dunlap's "Turtle Ranch" west of Louisburg with a campfire/chuck wagon dinner, cowboy music and poetry recitations. Don Collop of Rutledge, left, and Richard Dunlap, also serving food, were among the founders of the MCPA on June 30, 1996. Other founders were Jeff Anslinger of Savannah and the late Leroy Watts of Verona. Deeming it "a privilege and not a chore," the Dunlaps have hosted this fall gathering for 26 years, including diverse fans of cowboy culture, in addition to poets and musicians.

Local talent

Local cattleman, builder and cowboy poet Brandon Yates recited a moving rendition of the verse "Little Breeches."

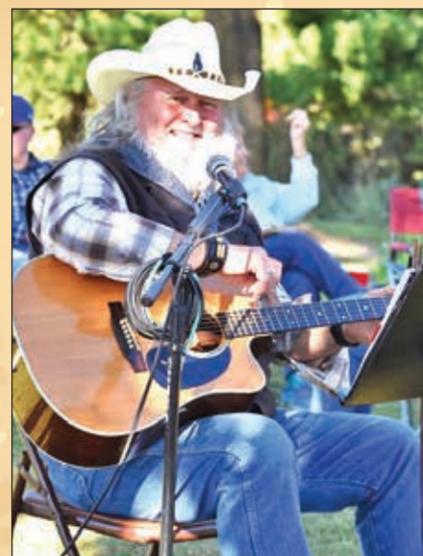

More than a chuck wagon cook

Chuck wagon aficionado Don Collop recited flawlessly long verses by Waddie Mitchell and the late Badger Clark.

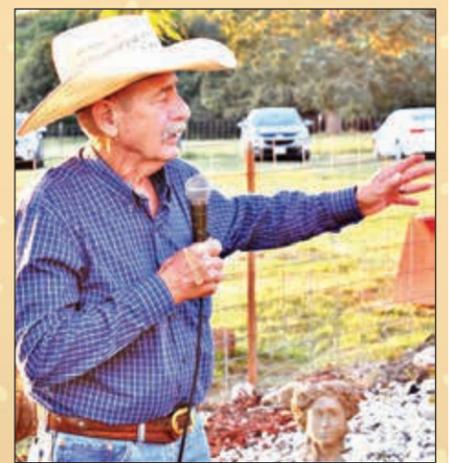

1910 chuck wagon

Hailing from near Rutledge in northeast Missouri, MCPA founding member Don Collop returned Sept. 25 with this chuck wagon to Richard and Laurel Dunlap's "Turtle Ranch" west of Louisburg for the 25th anniversary fall gathering of the association. Built in 1910 by the famed Schuttler Wagon Co. in Chicago (1843-1925), the farm wagon was converted by Collop to a chuck wagon after the MCPA was founded in 1996. One of three he owns — he has 1905 and 1919 vintage wagons at home — this wagon has been to events from Kansas and Arkansas and throughout Missouri.

Cowboy grin

Longtime MCPA member Harold Williams of Joplin cracks a grin after finishing a cowboy tune.

Battlefield cowboy

Jerry "Jake" White of Battlefield recited verses on the pleasures of life in the saddle, closing each performance with a rousing cowboy "Whoopee."

University of Missouri Extension in Christian County has recognized the Reinert Family Farm in Billings as a 2021 Missouri Century Farm.

The 80-acre Reinert farm, which sits east of Billings, was purchased in the early 1900s by Henry Reinert and Emma Reinert. Their grandson, John Reinert, who lives and raises cattle on the farm today, recalls the farm's history.

The farm began with a teenage immigrant who dreamed of a better life in Missouri.

"My grandfather was born in Hanover, Germany, and immigrated to the United States in 1895, when he was 19. He was naturalized as a U.S. citizen in 1900. He was very proud of his citizenship, because he framed his naturalization certificate and hung it on the wall in the farmhouse," John Reinert said.

Henry and Emma Reinert had three children, one of them being John Reinert's father, Oscar Reinert.

"My dad was born in the farmhouse where I also grew up," John Reinert recounted. "He lived and worked on the farm with his parents and my mother, Hilda (Salchow) Reinert. My grandparents and parents managed to scratch out a living in the rocky soil by raising chickens and turkeys, selling eggs, growing wheat, oats and corn, raking and hauling hay and milking dairy cows. Together, my parents raised five children, and we all learned our work ethic by doing these chores as well.”

It took everyone contributing for the Reinert family farm to make it.

“Working together as a family ensured the survival of our family farm,” John Reinert said.

cattle to raising registered Gelbvieh beef cattle.

“One of the reasons I chose Gelbvieh cattle is because they are a docile breed which originated from Germany,” John Reinert said.

The look of the farm has also changed due to a tornado in May 2003. The tornado destroyed many mature oak trees, the farmhouse and all the farm buildings. Fortunately, John and Denise were able to replace most of the buildings that were lost.

In 1976, the Centennial Farm project was initiated in Missouri, awarding certificates to people owning farms that had been in the same family for 100 years or more. The MU College of Agriculture, Food and Natural Resources and MU Extension’s Century Farm program annually recognizes more than 100 farms. In 2008, the Missouri Farm Bureau became a program co-sponsor. More than 8,000 Missouri Century Farms have been recognized.

“Missouri Farm Bureau is a proud partner in the recognition of century farms,” said Garrett Hawkins, president of Missouri Farm Bureau. “We applaud the hardworking farm families that have kept us fed and clothed for generations. They represent an important part of our heritage and laid a foundation for the bounty Americans enjoy every day.”

To qualify, farms must meet the following criteria:

- The same family must have owned the farm for 100 consecutive years.
- The line of ownership from the original settler or buyer may be through children, grandchildren, siblings, and nephews or nieces, including through marriage or adoption.
- The farm must be at least 40 acres of the original land acquisition and make a financial contribution to the overall farm income.

John Reinert states that he is “very blessed to be able to live and raise cattle on the family farm with my wife, Denise, our son, Kyle, and nephew, Dan. It’s not often that farms can remain in a family for three generations, and I am grateful for the opportunity.”

“The Missouri Century Farm Program celebrates the lasting contributions farmers and ranchers have made to our county and state heritage,” said Pam Duitsman, Christian County en-

Family expands with, remains on farm over the years

Few great things in life come without sacrifice, and though it's been a place of lasting memories, and sometimes tragedy, Marie Biggers and her family have made their share of them to remain on the land that's now been part of their ancestry for a century.

Some of the struggles the family faced came not long after Annie Martha (Tracy) and John Tony Trantham purchased the first 80 acres of the family farm in 1921, a decade after the original farmhouse was built, and several years before the older barn and accompanying shed were constructed.

In that decade prior, Annie and Tony's daughter, Marie, died at age 4 due to bronchitis or pneumonia, but the couple had two sons, Cecil (born 1914) and Truman (1917), and a daughter, Leona, born the year after purchasing the land.

In 1924, the couple purchased the other 40 acres that were part of the original farm. But just a year after that, John Tony died at age 35 after falling from a tree while coon hunting, as well as from encephalitis.

A dozen years after his passing, Annie held a public auction of the cattle, farm implements and more, and she, Leona and Truman went to live on her brother's farms in Illinois while Cecil remained on the farm. They would return three years later, and in the next decade, Cecil, now in his 30s, constructed the rock barn, rock garage and rock cellar and washhouse with the help of the rest of the family.

In 1947, Leona and Vaughn Richerson were married, and two years later, Annie Martha sold the 120 acres to the couple while continuing to live on the farm until her death in 1975. During that time, they built an addition on the farmhouse as their family grew with three children: Mary Ann, Tony and Marie.

"My dad milked cows, and we did chores, homework and went to church," Marie recalls. "They had cattle and hay; [I was] taking care of little calves, feeding chickens ... no one locked their doors. It was a great, great neighborhood; the good old days."

In 1967, Marie married Darel Biggers, and the two were for 15 months in Berlin, where she became pregnant with their daughter, Brenda. They returned home without furniture or a car, but Darel was accepted into Southwest Baptist University, and the couple moved to Bolivar. Then, when Brenda was born, they moved to Strafford.

“He was still in school, and I kept my job in Bolivar, so every day we were driving there with the baby,” Marie said. “Before we left Strafford we had Stephen, and we moved to Marshfield, then Diggins, but I wanted back out in the country, so in 1975, we started our house up there.”

In 1974, Marie and Darel acquired a handful of acres from Vaughn and Leona, and later would buy more parcels, eventually owning 40 acres on the east side of the farm as they added to their family, and had another son, Craig. Vaughn and Leona grew corn, kafir corn and grass hay crops, and also raised hogs, chickens and turkeys, and had a team of work horses at one time. Vaughn milked Jersey cows, later changing to beef cattle. As her parents got older, Marie’s family took them to the doctor and dispensed their medicine while also helping tend to farm work, such as helping with hay and cattle.

“My husband worked nights for 23 years, and he didn’t get much sleep during hay season; he was doing ours and my dad’s, too,” she said.

In 1987, developers from Tulsa bought the 600-acre County Line (Greene-Webster) Ranch, and meanwhile, Darel and Marie, along with their sons, purchased an extra 102 acres around the farm.

In 1997, Vaughn and Leona celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary, but the following year, Vaughn was injured by a cow with a newborn calf. He spent 45 days in neuro trauma, and afterward, he and Leona entered a nursing home.

Vaughn would pass away in 2001, but the year prior, most of his and Leona’s belongings were sold at public auction. Marie and Darel purchased the remaining 80 acres, making the farm a total of 222. The year Vaughn died, 10 acres were deeded to Stephen for a home, and Marie and Darel got a new home on the property, as well.

When Darel passed away unexpectedly in 2011, five years before the death of Leona (age 94), the family had a choice to make. The decision was to stay on the land that was their heritage.

“We didn’t want to see it divided,” Marie said. “And we do have to live somewhere. We make it. The boys, they work six days a week, then they come home and do farm work.”

Craig married his wife, Tracy, and they had four sons, all of whom live on the farm. In 2004, Stephen’s daughter was born, but when she was 14, the original farmhouse caught fire in the wall around the flue, burning the interior. Although the house still stands, Stephen lost most of his belongings. He and his brother built a new house for Stephen just southwest of the original house.

The Biggerses have previously raised Missouri fox trotter and saddlebred horses with a few litters of German shepherds, and they currently run 40 head of black Angus cattle on the farm and produce hay.

TINY FILLEY HOLDS TONS OF MEMORIES FOR THE WHITESELL FAMILY

Denny Whitesell and his mother, Vera, reminisce over the history of the small village of Filley.

By Pat Hindman

PATRICIAH@CEDARREPUBLICAN.COM

Southwest Missourians know that even the smallest unincorporated community in any given county holds a treasure of history. Filley in Cedar County is one of those bountiful areas where residents still have bountiful memories.

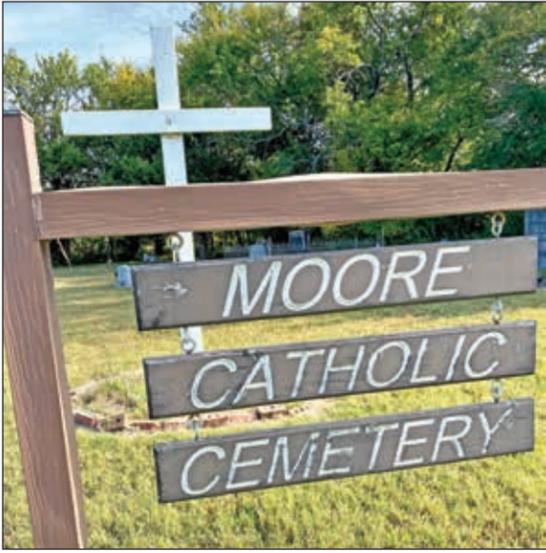

Filley is a small, unincorporated community in Cedar County, 11 miles west of Stockton. However, for the Whitesell family, especially Vera Whitesell, it has been her home for most of her life.

Whitesell, in her 80s, was born just a short distance from where she now lives. Most of her children, five grandchildren and great-grandchildren live nearby.

The town may be small, but Vera and her son, Denny, appreciate the rich heritage of the community. A post office was built in Filley in 1882 and remained until 1919.

At one time, the town had a gas station with one pump. Later, it appeared to hit a growth spurt and then halted.

Perhaps one of the least-known facts about Filley is that the name did not come from the misspelling of a young colt, or a filly. The name came from Chauncey Ives Filley (1829-1923), who was the 18th mayor of St. Louis. A Google search did not show the relationship between the town and Filley, who appeared to live most of his life in St. Louis.

At one time, Filley was a thriving community with a blacksmith shop and a hotel. Later it had three grocery stores, including Decker grocery and Louie Bowen's shop and garage, according to Denny Whitesell. John Korth took over the garage that apparently was always a favorite meeting place between chores. Even later, there was an antique store.

"People have said if the railroad had run through Filley, it would have been bigger than El Dorado Springs," Denny said.

El Dorado Springs is Filley's nearby neighboring community.

Filley was known for its August picnics organized by the Whitesells and other community members. Vera's husband's grandfather B. C. Whitesell owned a general store in both Filley and Stockton.

At the first picnic, he was a planner of the event and ordered watermelon and other produce, and donated the hog; but he never lived to see the first picnic. He died two weeks prior to the event.

The picnic itself, however, carried on for a number of years with the Whitesells' donating the pig for roasting.

Eventually, the community came together to build a shelter house for events such as the picnic and 4-H events, with Vera and her family working together to help finish it.

At one time, the community had its own school, the Cherry Valley School named after Cherry Valley creek that flows nearby Vera's home. Vera's deceased husband, Kennie Whitesell, attended the school, and Mary Belle Johnson taught at the school. Kennie Whitesell was presiding commissioner of Cedar County for 22 years.

"I understand years ago Filley used to have a tavern that was pretty wild with fights and all," Denny said. "There is a story that during the war (World War II) a Japanese man came into the tavern and got 'whipped,'" he said. "After that, the saying was the Japanese might take the U.S., but they won't take Filley."

Today, Filley has a new meat processing store and an operating dairy farm that is owned by Stanley Ehlers. Most families farm and raise cattle, and some rent pastures for sheep.

Just west of Filley is the Moore Catholic Cemetery. Denny Whitesell said it is the only Catholic cemetery in Cedar County. Now the Catholic Church in El Dorado Springs tends the cemetery.

Structures in "downtown" Filley began deteriorating after World War II, according to a Cedar County Republican newspaper article, but the memories and the love of community are still in the hearts of the Whitesell families and others who call Filley their home.

Buildings in the once-thriving Filley began to deteriorate after World War II.

FAMILY FARM STARTED OUT RUNNING BEEF CATTLE AND PLANS TO CONTINUE THAT OPERATION

Kelly Gilden is proud of the Century Farm designation, as well as his family that shares this honor with him.

Story and photos by Linda Simmons, Bolivar Herald-Free Press

Take a drive north on Mo. 83 from Bolivar and you come upon a gateway to history.

Shooting off the chip and seal onto a gravel lane that winds along the Pomme de Terre River, you arrive at a 120-acre farm now managed by Kelly Gilden and his two sons, Elijah and Ryan.

The acreage is nestled in rolling hills that overlook the river. It is and always has been a beef cattle and hay operation.

The pear tree that stands by the old springhouse still produces fruit, along with a couple other trees still standing where there was at one time an orchard. The kids enjoy checking the trees for pears.

“We run cattle in this area but not until after deer season is over,” Gilden says.

Situated on the property is the springhouse that has stood witness to multiple generations for over a century. Built of beige-colored rock with a metal roof, it is one of the few original buildings left on the property.

The original homeplace still stands proud after over a century of housing the family. The red flowers frame the front stoop of the white sided home. The home holds many memories, overlooking the area that once was filled with pigs and another area where horses roamed.

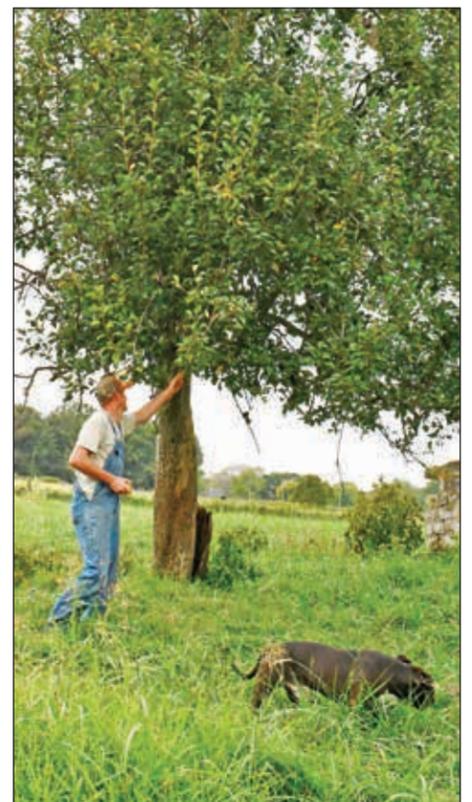

Today, Kelly lives in the old homeplace, the same house that his grandfather Lige Wilson was born in. The house has a lot of history in it, but the time has come that in the near future Kelly plans to clear the way to build a new house in the spot the old homestead stands today.

Kelly and his sons, Elijah and Ryan, all work the farm, as well as holding down full-time jobs elsewhere. Kelly works for DeLong Plumbing, Heating and Air in Springfield, Elijah is a mechanic for Bobcat in Springfield and Ryan is a mechanic for Springfield Public Services.

On a beautiful fall afternoon, Elijah and his wife, Lindsay, along with Paisley and Everett, and Ryan with his wife, Adrian, and daughter Aria, enjoy piling in the back of Kelly’s truck and riding over the grounds. Of course, the pups love getting in on the action. The family

Pepper, a blue heeler pup, and Jake, a pit bull, both find exploring the grounds around the old springhouse to be great fun. The Gilden family members standing by the old springhouse that was on the farm when it was purchased are Lindsay holding Everett, Elijah, Paisley, Kelly, Ryan, and Adrian holding Aria.

Elijah picks a pear off one of the pear trees that is still on the property. The area around the springhouse used to be an orchard, and there are still a few of the trees left that produce fruit each year.

“Keeping it in the family is important to me.”

enjoys being together and taking care of the farm.

The Wilson Gilden Century Farm designation makes them all very proud. The 120 acres were bought by Emma McCarthy, Kelly’s great-grandma, on July 5, 1918. McCarthy purchased the land from J.V. and Sarah Mohler. Later McCarthy deeded it to her daughter, Thelma Wilson, who then deeded it to her daughter Peggy Gilden. Peggy deeded it on to her son, Kelly.

“Keeping it in the family is important to me,” says Gilden, who plans on passing the farm on to his sons and their families.

From 1918 to 2021, the Wilson Gilden farm has maintained what the farm was originally established to do. It is Gilden’s intention that the farm will always be used for beef cattle and hay. The history that surrounds the farm will always be there for the next generations to carry on. Although everyone has jobs outside of the farm, preserving the farm and all that it has meant to the family over the years is very important to all of them.

LOVE for our land never changes

THE GRANT FAMILY CENTURY FARM HAS STRONG ROOTS

Story and photos by Linda Simmons,

Larry Grant along with his sons Todd and Scott take great pride in their heritage, and the farm is something they all love and plan to have in the Grant family for many more years to come.

"Time changes so many things, but the love for our land never changes," Larry Grant says.

The 120-acre farm that lies close to Morrisville was established in 1918 by Howard and Mary Grant. In 1925 their farmhouse was used as a "sick house" during the flu that was ravaging the country that year. Mary would care for the sick while the men stayed outside around a fire, caring for the farm chores. Howard and Mary lost their daughter and granddaughter that year to the flu.

But most of the memories that surround the Grants were shared with them from Edwin and Imogene Grant, having two sons, Emil and Larry. Edwin was a carpenter, but he and Imogene still ran the farm together and were milking cows at that time, usually about 20 head. Imogene took care of the family and was very diligent in keeping details logged in her diaries over the years and could always look back and tell you even what the temperature was on any given day.

"She would walk over a mile to check their mail every day," Larry recalls.

And her family can still hear her quoting her favorite saying ... "Use it up, Wear it out, Make it Do or Do without."

Larry recalls how Edwin and Imogene would drive all over their fields and fence lines to cut thistles and cedars. They never let thistles and cedars get too far. They'd keep a bucket, work gloves and shovel in the back of their truck just in case they spotted one.

Today Larry along with the grandkids remember how "Granny" always worked hard in the kitchen, as well. She always made homemade bread and blackberry jelly. She'd deliver loaves to all her family with love.

In 1957 they were a part of history in the making when they were the first farm in southwest Missouri to have the

The first pole barn that was built on the Grant farm in 1957 was featured in a story in the Missouri Farmer Magazine.

BARN raisings aren't what they used to be. A few decades ago, when one farmer got ready to put up a new barn, neighbors for miles around gathered to help lift the heavy timbers. Farm women got in on the act too, preparing food for the hungry workers . . . food that would rival any put in front of a threshing crew or a 4th of July picnic crowd.

Today, one or two neighbors exchange help and in a matter of a week or two, they each have a barn built.

But a different type of barn is being built today . . . one that goes up fast, costs less and lasts a long time . . . the pole-type building has taken over.

Pole-type farm buildings usually cost less than $1 per square foot of enclosed space where "home" labor is used. They cost so little because pressure preserved poles, set into the ground, replace conventional masonry foundations. The entire superstructure is "hung" on the supporting poles. The floor is laid directly on the ground and requires no other support.

These buildings also go up fast. Mainly because no foundation and practically no framing is required. Wall and roof covering materials are applied in large sheets. Once poles are in the ground, they can be trued up by anyone who can set a fence post straight.

Pole-type buildings last for long time because pressure pre-first pole barn built. The pole barn still is in use on the farm and holds a lot of hay from the operation. They quit the milking operation of the farm in the 1970s, and are now devoted to a hay operation.

Larry Grant and his wife, Diana, are proud to be the third generation to own the farm. Being designated a Century Farm is something Larry takes great pride in. He can still be found driving around in his side-by-side with his dog, Bandit, checking on the fences and his family. When there is work being done on the farm, Larry likes to supervise.

Erica and Christopher Young are pictured on the land of their family's Century Farm. Both are excited to continue the family tradition of living on, caring for and working the same land their family has since 1892.

White Oak Farm holds century of family history

By Shelby Atkison

SHELBYA@MARSHFIELDMAIL.COM

The White Oak Century Farm is on White Oak Road in Rogersville and was originally homesteaded in 1892. Home to loads of family history, current owner Christopher Young and his wife, Erica, are thrilled to continue a family legacy and plant their roots on the same ground.

"My grandmother's parents worked on and lived on the farm ... their names were Edward and Georgia Glaubitz," Young explained. "The farm then went to my grandmother Mary Lou Downs in 1971 and is now owned by my grandparents Mary Lou Downs and Ray Downs, as well as my wife and I."

John H. Sherertz and Mary Sherertz were the first in the family to homestead the land and were the great-grandparents of Young's grandmother, his great-great-great-grandparents. Bruno Glaubitz, the great-great-grandfather of Young, purchased another part of the land in 1913. The land was then passed down through the family until it was passed in 1919 to Nannie Burks, who was Young's grandmother's grandma.

“We are currently the sixth generation to live on the land,” he added. “It’s cool to know so many of my family members were raised here and worked this same land.”

The Youngs are currently in the process of building a house and getting a new barn put up to continue the family legacy. Like his ancestors, Young plans to utilize both the fields and raise livestock. However, he and his wife have settled on opening an alpaca farm, rather than cattle. According to the couple, the biggest reward has been continuing their family legacy, working the land and being a part of the Rogersville community.

“The goal is to have you-pick flowers and a small alpaca farm opened up next year,” Young said. “People will be able to interact with the alpacas ... and we want to offer education classes on gardening, farming and livestock.”

The farm land has been used for various purposes throughout the years, including crops, livestock and land rental. Young’s great-great-grandfather Bruno Glaubitz tended to large numbers of livestock, and that trend has

TEST HARVESTED DEER for chronic wasting disease

By Kathryn Skopec

KATHRYNS@CEDARREPUBLICAN.COM

As Missouri's firearms deer hunting is set to kick off in a few weeks, hunters — especially those in Cedar County and Polk County — should be reminded to test harvested deer for chronic wasting disease.

CWD was first detected in Missouri's free-ranging deer population in 2012 and has since been found in 18 counties. It's a deadly, infectious disease in deer and other members of the deer family that eventually kills all animals it infects. There is no vaccine or cure. The disease is spread from deer to deer and through the environment, according to the Missouri Department of Conservation.

To date, there have been no reported cases of CWD infection in humans. However, the Missouri Department of Health and Senior Services says animal studies suggest CWD poses a risk to some types of nonhuman primates, such as monkeys, that eat meat from CWD-infected animals or come in contact with brain or body fluids from infected deer or elk.

The disease remains relatively rare in the state, being detected in 206 deer out of more than 152,300 tested by MDC since 2012, according to the MDC.

Currently, there are 34 counties in Missouri that require mandatory CWD sampling during the opening weekend of firearms season Nov. 13 or 14, including Cedar County and Polk County. These counties are designated as CWD Management Zones, due to being within 10 miles of where a positive case of CWD has been found.

CWD sampling takes only a few minutes and consists of MDC staff cutting an incision across the throat of harvested deer to remove lymph nodes for testing, per the MDC. Tissue samples are sent to an independent lab for testing.

Hunters will be given a card with information about getting free test results for their deer after samples are processed. Hunters can get their CWD test results for free online at mdc.mo.gov/cwdResults. Results are usually available within three weeks or less from the time of sampling, the MDC says.

Voluntary CWD sampling and testing is also offered statewide during

Among the 44 new cases of chronic wasting disease found in Missouri deer this past season in 2020 was this sick deer. The Missouri Department of Conservation determined the deer showed signs of CWD infection, and it was euthanized by MDC staff. CWD testing confirmed the diagnosis.

Missouri Department of Conservation staff remove lymph nodes from the neck of a harvested deer to have them tested for chronic wasting disease. Lymph nodes are one area in deer where CWD is concentrated.

have permit and telecheck information available.

Hunters must also follow carcass-movement restrictions for deer harvested in a CWD Management Zone county and when bringing parts of harvested deer and other cervids into Missouri from another state, according to the MDC.

For hunters who harvest deer in Missouri from a CWD Management Zone county, deer must be telechecked before any parts of the carcass may be transported out of the county of harvest.

Whole carcasses and heads may only be transported out of the county of harvest if delivered to a licensed meat processor, taxidermist or to an approved CWD sampling station within 48 hours of exiting the county of harvest. On Nov. 13-14, deer must be taken on the day of harvest to a CWD mandatory sampling station.

The following carcass parts may be moved outside of the county of harvest without restriction:

- Meat that is cut and wrapped or that has been boned out.
- Quarters or other portions of meat with no part of the spinal column or head attached.
- Hides from which all excess tissue has been removed.
- Antlers or antlers attached to skull plates or skulls cleaned of all muscle and brain tissue.
- Finished taxidermy products.

For hunters bringing harvested deer and other cervids into Missouri from another state:

- Hunters may no longer transport whole cervid carcasses into the state.
- Heads from cervids with the cape attached and no more than 6 inches of neck attached may be brought into Missouri only if they are delivered to a licensed taxidermist within 48 hours of entering Missouri.

There is no longer a requirement that cervid carcass parts coming into the state be reported to the MDC carcass transport hotline.

The following cervid parts can be transported into Missouri without restriction:

- Meat that is cut and wrapped or that has been boned out.
- Quarters or other portions of meat with no part of the spinal column or head attached.
- Hides from which all excess tissue has been removed.
- Antlers or antlers attached to skull plates or skulls cleaned of all muscle and brain tissue.
- Upper canine teeth.
- Finished taxidermy products.

the entire deer season. Find locations and more information online at mdc.mo.gov/cwd or by contacting an MDC regional office at mdc.mo.gov/contact-engage/regional-mdc-offices.

About CWD sampling

Per the MDC, hunters should do the following before arriving at a CWD mandatory sampling station:

- Field dress and telecheck deer.
- Bring the carcass or just the head.
- Capes may be removed in preparation for taxidermy.
- Position deer in vehicles with head and neck easily accessible.
- Be sure the person who harvested the deer is present.
- Have the hunter's conservation ID number ready.
- Be prepared to find the location of harvest on a map.
- If using a paper permit, have it detached from the deer for easy access.
- If using the MO Hunting app,
