shop, a barbershop . . . and, for about 20 years, a post office.

These days it is closed to the public, but in its day the ghost town of Christmas, Arizona - about 10 miles north of Winkelman - boasted a population of about 1,000.

From June 17, 1905 to March 30, 1935, the date it finally closed - it was shut down several times before - the Christmas post office took in Christmas cards and other packages from across the country by people who wanted their items re-mailed with a Christmas postmark. Despite the final closure, holiday mail came in for the next 20 years and was forwarded to the Winkelman post office.

Christmas, like a number of Arizona towns, was built around copper mining. Between 1905 and 1943 the Christmas Mine produced 55 million pounds of copper, worth over $10 million. The town that sprang up around it had a dairy, a grocery store, a school, a church, a cemetery, a hat

As for the town cemetery, the website findagrave.com lists 57 memorials there but

The sale will feature lots of books – cookbooks, historical, romance, Western and kids' books – along with holiday decorations for Halloween, Thanksgiving and Christmas, holiday dish sets, platters and cookie containers. Come and support a great organization. See you there.

One thing the town did not have was gambling halls, saloons or brothels. The Christmas Mine is also notable as the place three minerals – apachite, junitoite and ruizite – were first found. The first mining claims were filed in 1878 by William Tweed and Dennis O'Brien. In 1882 Dr. James Douglas, acting as an agent for Phelps Dodge, bought Tweed's claims and acquired an option on O'Brien's holdings. Phelps Dodge formed the San Carlos Mining Company to explore and develop the area; a 70-mile wagon road was built from the Picacho railhead. Operations halted in 1882 when it was determined the site was on the San Carlos Apache Reservation, but on Dec. 22, 1902 President Theodore Roosevelt signed an executive order changing the reservation boundaries. The mine, and the town, would get its name some three days later. A prospector named George Chittenden, founder of the Saddle Mountain Mining Company, and his partner N.H. Mellor staked their claim in the early hours of Dec. 25, 1902. They had kept an eye on the site and so had Phelps Dodge, who had hired a watchman – who, it is said, went to Globe to celebrate the holiday. "We filled our stockings and named the place Christmas in honor of the day," Chittenden would say later. After settling a lawsuit by Phelps Dodge, Saddle Mountain Mining Company worked the site until 1907. In that time the mine produced about 4.5 million pounds of copper. Later owners of the Christmas Mine included the Gila Copper Sulphide Company, Miner Products Company and Inspiration Consolidated Copper Company. A slump in copper prices forced the mine's final closure in the early 1980s. Today Freeport McMoRan owns the property where the mine and the town stood.

How to Deal with Regrets

By Pastor Greg S. Baker
First Baptist Church of Miami

We all have regrets in life. Each of us wish we'd have done something different, taken a lost opportunity, said, "I love you" to someone now passed on, or just chosen a different path in life to walk.

In the years that I have pastored and counseled people, the strongest regrets I have encountered are those from people who lost a loved one to death. I hear comments like, "I wish," "If only," "It's not fair," "Why?," and so many others. These regrets can consume a person to the point where he or she becomes paralyzed by them, living in guilt and frustration.

Regrets can be strong or minor. No matter the case, dealing with regrets is something that each of us must do.

NEVER WALLOW IN REGRETS SHOW THAT YOU CARE

If you had no regrets, you probably do not care much. In the case of the death of someone dear and close, I would be bothered by someone who claims kinship or friendship with the departed and yet has no regrets. Regrets demonstrate the level of love and care that we have for such a person. Regrets also demonstrate that we are now fully aware of the missed opportunities.

So in a very real sense, regrets are good. If you didn't have any regrets, you would be calloused or simply unaware of the opportunities that have slipped you by. Our past shapes our future and affects our present. We can't escape that fact. Although we cannot change the past, we must be aware of it, because the past shows us the path we took to get to where we are at. Until you know where you're at, how can you get to where you want to be? Regrets can help you see the path clearly — as long as they don't consume you and keep you in the past.

NEVER WALLOW IN REGRETS

Regrets have a lamentable attraction to feel the need to wallow in them. We flay ourselves with these regrets like some sort of whip on our guilty conscience. Guilt and regrets are God-given responses to teach us lessons. Wallowing in them is counterproductive.

If you lost someone dear, you'll want to wallow in your own self-pity and focus on your regrets. But that robs the person you love of all the other things they accomplished in life. You focus on your failings with them instead of on them. Regrets can show that you care, but wallowing in them is an act of selfishness.

Wallowing in regrets keeps us from living. It keeps us from moving forward.

USE THE LESSONS THAT REGRETS TEACH

Regrets show us that we can't afford to miss any more opportunities. If you lost someone close to you, don't let your regrets keep you from being part of those who are still alive. Take the lessons you learned and try not to miss any more opportunities.

Spend more time with others. Ask yourself, if so and so died today, what regrets would I have? Then go out and do something about it. Regrets allow us to realize what is most important in our lives.

you where your values are. Use that. As a Christian, I use regrets as motivation. I regret some of the things I have done in my life. I regret some of my choices. But having a loving and forgiving God allows me focus on what I can still accomplish, the things I can still do, and the choices that are still before me. Regrets can be very motivational.

The Apostle Paul was very zealous in attacking and persecuting Christian-ity. After his conversion, do you think he had regrets? Of course he did Those regrets propelled him forward (1 Corinthians 15:10) and helped him become perhaps the greatest Christian of all time.

You can do the same. For more information go to fbcmiami.com.
