West Nile virus found in Brookings County

PIERRE— The South Dakota Department of Health has confirmed the first West Nile virus mosquito pools of the season have been detected in Brookings County. State officials urge the public to take simple steps to protect themselves and their families against WNV, which can cause fever, headaches, rash, swollen lymph nodes, and muscle and joint aches.

"Given the rural nature of our state and increased outdoor activities during the summer, protecting yourself against mosquito bites remains an import-

McPherson County Auditor Lindley Howard (standing) watches citizens conduct a re-audit of the 2024 primary election on June 25 in Leola. The re-audit discovered human errors from the initial hand-counted audit.

Hand counting errors muddle post-election audit in one county

By STU WHITNEY
South Dakota News Watch

South Dakota's most populous county, Minnehaha, was in the spotlight this week after its top election official ordered the county's post-election audit to consist of all 2024 primary ballots being counted by hand.

But the debate over counting votes by hand vs. machine found a more decisive venue 250 miles away in McPherson County, on the state's northeast edge bordering North Dakota, with a population of about 2,300.

On June 13, citizen hand-counting boards were formed in the county seat of Leola, South Dakota, to conduct a post-election audit of 100% of the ballots from the June 4 primary, which had been tallied by machine tabulators on election day.

The auditing boards, mostly composed of residents who support hand counts and question the accuracy and security of voting machines, encountered problems.

The hand count in two of the county's four precincts did not match election day tallies, and board members of those precincts ended the audits before the count was reconciled, according to county officials.

South Dakota Canvassing, an electoral activist group that supports eliminating machine voting and tabulators, declared victory on social media, posting the tally sheets and stating that the "hand count results were correct and the machine errors are not explainable."

'You're going to see problems'

McPherson County State's Attorney Austin Hoffman filed a request for declaratory judgment June 20 to have the ballots unsealed so the counts could be reconciled, though none of the county or legislative races were close enough to be impacted.

The Brookings School District recently said farewell to 16 retirees, including long-time Director of Business Services Brian Lueders.

"When I started on July 1, 2005, I had no idea that I would retire in Brookings after 19 years of service," Lueders said. "As a Brookings High School graduate of the class of '85, I am proud that my three children have attended kindergarten through 12th grade in this district as well."

During his years with the school district, Lueders' office oversaw three bond elections — for Camelot Intermediate, Dakota Prairie Elementary, and most recently for the Hillcrest and Medary Elementary schools. He was also involved with the expansion projects at Mickelson Middle School and Brookings BROOKINGS — An alcohol compliance check in Brookings on Wednesday caught two violators — Edgebrook Golf Course and the Brookings Softball Association.

Edgebrook is owned by the city of Brookings through the Parks, Recreation & Forestry Department and the clubhouse where beer is sold is operated by a third-party contractor. According to the city's website, the Southbrook Diamonds concessions stand is jointly operated by the city of Brookings and the Brookings Softball Association and provides snack food and beverages, including beer, during a variety of events. It is generally run by volunteers.

The two city facilities were among nine locations checked by the Brookings Police Department using an underage buyer. Edgebrook is at 1415 22nd Ave. S., while the softball association is at the Southbrook Softball Complex on 22nd Avenue South.

In response to a Register inquiry, Parks, Recreation, and Forestry Director Kristin Zimmerman, whose

A state circuit court judge allowed the re-audit to occur June 25. Board members from the non-affected precincts were asked to handle the counting. That re-audit established that human error during the hand counting accounted for the earlier discrepancies, and that machine counts from the primary election were correct, according to County Auditor Lindley Howard, who provided the tally sheets and other documentation to News Watch. Howard also noted that the hand counting took about 15 minutes per race, which in a general election with 13 or 14 races could have caused reporting lags even in McPherson County, the state's 54th largest county.

"If anything, it reinforced my opinion that hand counting is not the way to go on election night if you're looking for speed and accuracy," said Howard, who is also a member of the State Board of Elections.

New law requires audits

South Dakota passed a law in 2023 requiring post-election audits using hand counts of randomly selected voting precincts. The law calls for an audit of at least 5% of precincts, but McPherson County consists of just four precincts.

In February, the county's board of commissioners voted in favor of a hand-counted post-election audit of all ballots cast in the June 4 primary election.

Needing 20 citizens to fill out four audit boards of five members each, Howard chose people who had expressed interest in hand counting as an alternative to machines.

One of those was Mike Klipfel, a Leola farmer who supported a petition for a public vote to eliminate voting machines in McPherson County for 2024. The county commission voted in April to reject the petition based on legal advice that the measure's wording could violate federal voting laws.

'It is not numerically possible'

The initial pre-election audit was held June 13 at the McPherson County Courthouse and took two-and-a-half hours. Two of the precincts came out fine. The other two had problems.

One of the discrepancies involved Precinct 3, where 127 Republican ballots were received. That should have amounted to 254 total votes for District 23 House, since people could vote for two candidates and undercounts would still be tallied.

The hand count ended up with 253 total votes.

"It is not numerically possible to have 253 total votes tallied, including under votes, with 127 ballots," Hoffman, the state's attorney, wrote in his June 20 request to unseal the ballots for another audit.

Hoffman made it clear in his filing that the results of the District 23 legislative races "will not be affected by the results of a post-election recount."

But since the discrepancies in the audit weren't reconciled, county officials didn't want to send inaccurate final voting tallies to the secretary of state's office.

Commission race throws off count

In Precinct 4, there were 135 Republican ballots cast in the primary. The audit board tallied 262 votes in the District 23 House race. But the total should have been 270, with Hoffman again stating that a result of 262 was "not numerically possible" with 135 ballots.

Howard and Hoffman theorized that the board was likely thrown off by the fact that the McPherson County Commission race was only listed on four ballots. The board counted those ballots first and tallied the Senate ballots that also included the county race before setting those four ballots aside.

But they neglected to reincorporate those four ballots while counting the House race, making them eight votes short (two House votes per ballot). That explained why they came up with 262 rather than 270.

The same audit board "did re-count the Republican ballots to attempt to reconcile the tally numbers for the State Representative race," Hoffman wrote in his filing.

"However, it is believed that the four ballots were again not included in this re-count and the tally again came out to 262."

County officials cited human error for the discrepancies that occurred during the original post-election audit for Precincts 3 and 4.

"The eight-vote discrepancy in the original audit of Precinct 4 was human error from four ballots that were not included in the House race count when the board conducted the audit," Howard said, confirming earlier theories of what occurred.

"Really, the key to helping visitors enjoy their stay is making that genuine connection with them and finding out what they're interested in and then tailoring the many assets that we have available to what they're specifically looking for," Visit Brookings Executive Director Laura Schoen Carbonneau told the Brookings Register in an interview.

The program's first certification class will be July 2. The registration fee is $25, and it's there will be a monthly class for the foreseeable future. To register, head online to visitbrookings.com/industry-relations. Each class is limited to 30 participants.

"We have the next six months of classes available for people to take a look at, and we're starting to see a good amount of interest ... so we're very encouraged," she said.

Schoen Carbonneau believes the program will benefit not only its core audience, but others in the Brookings community as well.

"I want to make sure the people understand that, yes, this is first and foremost a program for the hospitality industry, but there are so many people that can benefit from going through the program," she said. "If you think about all the people who have interaction with those potential new residents or potential visitors because every new resident first begins as a visitor."

The program's funding includes private donations, but taxpayer dollars are in the mix as well, to the tune of around $17,000, with those dollars coming from the Visit Brookings budget.

ant factor against West Nile infection," said Dr. Joshua Clayton, State Epidemiologist for the Department of Health. "Something as simple as using bug spray or limiting activities between dusk-to-dawn hours can reduce your infection risk significantly."

Prevent mosquito bites and reduce the risk of WNV by taking the following precautions:

- Apply mosquito repellents (DEET, picaridin, oil of lemon eucalyptus 2-undecanone, paramenthane-diol, or IR3535) to clothes and exposed skin. Limit exposure by wearing pants and long sleeves in the evening.

- Limit time outdoors from dusk to midnight when mosquitoes are most active. Culex tarsalis are the primary carrier of WNV in South Dakota.

- Remove standing water that gives mosquitoes a place to breed. Regularly change the water in bird-baths, outside pet dishes, and drain water from other flowerpots and garden containers and stay away from areas near standing water.

- Support local mosquito control efforts.

Personal precautions are especially important for those at high risk for severe illness from WNV — people over 60 years of age, pregnant women, transplant patients, individuals with cancer, diabetes, hypertension, and kidney disease. People with symptoms like severe or unusual headaches should see their physicians.

South Dakota has reported more than 2,843 human cases and 53 deaths since WNV was first reported in 2002. Every county has reported cases.

Managing weeds in the garden

By MELINDA MYERS
The Brookings Register

Persistence is the key to success when battling bindweed.

No matter the weather, weeds seem to thrive and reproduce, and if left unchecked they can overwhelm the garden and gardener. These unwanted plants find their way into your garden as seeds, roots, rhizomes, or whole plants. Seeds can be carried in by the wind, birds, and other animals, or on the soles of shoes. Roots, rhizomes, and even plants hitch a ride in the soil or with plants that we move into the garden.

Start early managing weeds in your garden. Smaller weeds are easier to pull and removing them before they flower and form seeds can prevent hundreds of weeds in next year's landscape.

This is not always possible. Weather and busy schedules often limit gardening time, allowing these vigorous plants to overtake the garden.

It is never too late and worth investing time in managing weeds in the garden. Weeds are adaptable and vigorous, outcompeting your desirable plants for water and nutrients. Many serve as host plants for insect pests and diseases that may also attack your garden plants.

Carefully dig or pull weeds, removing the top and roots. Established weeds may have a deep tap root or extensive root system that may be difficult to remove. Depending on the weed, any part left behind has the potential to start a new plant.

Find the tool that best works for you. A Dutch or action hoe works well on small weeds where there is space between plants. Glide the cutting edge just below the soil surface to cut the roots. Many gardeners find a weed knife to be a useful tool. It allows you to dig right next to the weed and pop it out of the ground with minimal impact on surrounding plants.

If bending is an issue, you may opt for one of the standup weedeaters. There are several types available. Most have tines you insert into the soil surrounding the weed. A hand or foot-operated action causes the tines to tighten around the weed roots before you lever it out of the ground.

Perennial weeds are a bit more challenging. Many have extensive roots that are nearly impossible to remove entirely. Repeatedly digging up the plants can eventually manage these weeds, but it can take years. Cutting the plants back to the ground as soon as they appear can help "starve" them, prevent reseeding, and help contain and even eliminate some perennial weeds.

If the weeds begin to take over the garden, tackle those flowering or setting seeds first. Do not compost these or perennial weeds. Most compost piles don't get hot enough to kill the seeds or perennial weeds. Contact your local municipality to find out your options for disposing of these as well as perennial and invasive weeds.

Once the weeds are out of the garden, spread a layer of organic mulch over the soil surface. The finer the mulch, the thinner the layer needed. Pull the mulch away from tree trunks, shrub stems, and the crowns of your other plants.

Mulching helps suppress weeds by reducing seed sprouting and making it easier to pull the seedlings that get through the mulch. Increase your success by placing a couple of sheets of newspaper or a piece of cardboard beneath the mulch. Mulching won't stop existing perennial weeds like quackgrass and bindweed. Keep managing these until all the roots have been removed.

Shredded leaves, evergreen needles, and other organic mulch also conserve moisture, moderate soil temperatures, and add organic matter to the soil as it breaks down. Mulch also helps protect the soil from compaction and erosion during heavy rains. As many places experience more intense rainfall and higher-than-normal summer heat, mulching the soil becomes even more beneficial.

Consider the benefits when you head out to tackle the weeds in your garden. You will improve the health and beauty of your garden while burning between 200 and 400 calories every hour you weed.

Regents approve bachelor's degree program for accounting at SDSU

USD gets master's program in artificial intelligence.

ABERDEEN — The South Dakota Board of Regents announces the approval of two high-need programs designed to meet the growing workforce demands in the state and beyond. These programs include a bachelor's degree in accounting at South Dakota State University and a master's degree in artificial intelligence at the University of South Dakota.

"Both of these programs uniquely address the needs of South Dakota's economy," said BOR President Tim Rave. "Accounting has long been an area of critical need, and graduate-level programs in artificial intelligence are quickly emerging as a workforce demand."

SDSU's bachelor's degree in accounting aims to provide students with comprehensive training in various aspects of accounting, including managerial, financial, cost, and income tax accounting. The university currently provides a minor in accounting, and it believes that the bachelor's program will expand its students' educational opportunities, leading to improved professional prospects. Additionally, introducing a major in accounting will help meet the strong demand for accounting professionals in the job market in South Dakota.

The master of science in artificial intelligence (MSAI) at USD is a cutting-edge graduate program designed to address the rapid advancements and growing needs in the AI sector. The MSAI will encourage innovation through research initiatives and interdisciplinary collaboration, advancing the state's science and technology foundation. This emerging program will prepare graduates for leadership roles in AI research, development, and application across various industries, including technology, health-care, finance, and more.

These programs will help fill critical gaps in South Dakota's labor market by equipping students with specialized skills in accounting and artificial intelligence. Graduates of these programs will be well-prepared to take on vital roles in their respective fields, enhancing the region's economic growth and technological advancement.

Both programs will be offered at their respective universities beginning Fall 2024.

Oklahoma official orders schools to teach the Bible

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP)—Oklahoma's top education official ordered public schools Thursday to incorporate the Bible into lessons for grades 5 through 12, the latest effort by conservatives to incorporate religion into classrooms.

The directive drew immediate condemnation from civil rights groups and supporters of the separation of church and state, with some calling it an abuse of power and a violation of the U.S. Constitution.

The order sent to districts across the state by Republican State Superintendent Ryan Walters says adherence to the mandate is compulsory and "immediate and strict compliance is expected."

"The Bible is an indispensable historical and cultural touchstone," Walters said in a statement. "Without basic knowledge of it, Oklahoma students are unable to properly contextualize the foundation of our nation which is why Oklahoma educational standards provide for its instruction."

Oklahoma law already explicitly allows Bibles in the classroom and lets teachers use them in instruction, said Phil Bacharach, a spokesman for state Attorney General Gentner Drummond.

But it's not clear if Walters has the authority to mandate that schools teach it. State law says individual school districts have the exclusive authority to decide on instruction, curriculum, reading lists, instructional materials and textbooks.

The head of the Oklahoma chapter of the Council on American-Islamic Relations criticized the directive as a clear violation of the Constitution's Establishment Clause, which prohibits the government from "establishing" a religion.

"We adamantly oppose any requirements that religion be forcefully taught or required as a part of lesson plans in public schools, in Oklahoma, or anywhere else in the country," Adam Soltani said in a statement.

"Public schools are not Sunday schools," said Rachel Laser, president and CEO of Americans United for Separation of Church and State, in a statement. "This is textbook Christian Nationalism: Walters is abusing the power of his public office to impose his religious beliefs on everyone else's children. Not on our watch."

The directive is the latest salvo in an effort by conservative-led states to target public schools: Louisiana has required them to post the Ten Commandments in classrooms, while others are under pressure to teach the Bible and ban books and lessons about race, sexual orientation and gender identity. Earlier this week the Oklahoma Supreme Court blocked an attempt by the state to have the first publicly funded religious charter school in the country. A former public school teacher who was elected to his post in 2022, Walters ran on a platform of fighting "woke ideology," banning books from school libraries and getting rid of "radical leftists" who he claims are indoctrinating children in classrooms.

He has clashed with leaders in both parties for his focus on culture-war issues including transgender rights and banning books, and in January he faced criticism for appointing a right-wing social media influencer from New York to a state library committee.

Nearly 200 people charged in $2.7 billion health care fraud schemes crackdown

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly 200 people have been charged in a sweeping nationwide crackdown on health care fraud schemes with false claims topping $2.7 billion, the Justice Department said on Thursday.

Attorney General Merrick Garland announced the charges against doctors, nurse practitioners and others across the U.S. accused of a variety of scams, including a $900 million scheme in Arizona targeting dying patients.

"It does not matter if you are a trafficker in a drug cartel or a corporate executive or medical professional employed by a health care company," Garland told reporters. "If you profit from the unlawful distribution of controlled substances, you will be held accountable."

In the Arizona case, prosecutors have accused two owners of wound care companies of accepting more than $330 million in kickbacks as part of a scheme to fraudulently bill Medicare for amniotic wound grafts, which are dressings to help heal wounds.

Nurse practitioners were pressured to apply the wound grafts to elderly patients who didn't need them, including people in hospice care, the Justice Department said. Some patients died the day they received the grafts or within days, court papers say.

In less than two years, more than $900 million in bogus claims were submitted to Medicare for grafts that were used on fewer than 500 patients, prosecutors said.

The owners of the wound care companies, Alexandra Gehrke and Jeffrey King, were arrested this month at the Phoenix airport as they were boarding a flight to London, according to court papers urging a judge to keep them behind bars while they await trial. An attorney for Gehrke declined to comment, and a lawyer for King didn't immediately respond to an email from The Associated Press.

Authorities allege Gehrke and King, who got married this year, knew charges were coming and had been preparing to flee. At their home, authorities found a book titled "How To Disappear: Erase Your Digital Footprint, Leave False Trails, and Vanish Without a Trace," according to court papers. In one of their bags packed for their flight, there was a book titled "Criminal Law Handbook: Know Your Rights, Survive The System," the papers say.

Gehrke and King lived lavishly off the scheme, prosecutors allege, citing luxury cars, a nearly $6 million home and more than $520,000 in gold bars, coins and jewelry. Officials seized more than $52 million from Gehrke's personal and business bank accounts after her arrest, prosecutors say.

In total, 193 people — including 76 doctors, nurse practitioners, and other licensed medical professionals — were charged in a series of separate cases brought over about two weeks in the nationwide health care fraud sweep. Authorities seized more than $230 million in cash, luxury cars and other assets. The Justice Department carries out these sweeping health care fraud efforts periodically to help deter other potential wrongdoers.

Law limiting new oil wells in California set to take effect

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — A California law that bans drilling new oil wells near places like homes and schools will take effect soon after the oil industry said it would withdraw a referendum from the November ballot asking voters to block it.

The law, first passed in 2022, never took effect because the California Independent Petroleum Association gathered enough signatures to place a referendum on the ballot asking voters to overturn it.

The association announced Wednesday it would withdraw the referendum. Instead, they plan to file a lawsuit to ask a judge to block the law.

The announcement shakes up what has been a crowded ballot in November. Both sides had been gearing up for what would have been an expensive campaign.

California was once the nation's leading oil producer over a century ago, but has since been surpassed by Texas, New Mexico, North Dakota, Colorado, Alaska and Oklahoma. Still, the oil industry has remained a powerful force in state politics, known for having its way at the state Legislature.

But the industry's power has been declining, along with the state's oil production. The law California passed in 2022 bans drilling new wells within 3,200 feet (975 meters) of "sensitive receptors," defined as homes, schools, hospitals, nursing homes, retirement homes, prisons and any business that is open to the public.

In asking voters to block the law, the oil industry's strategy was to portray the it as an "energy shutdown." They said it would only increase the state's dependence on foreign oil and contribute to California's high gas prices, which remain among the highest in the country. Supporters of the law countered by saying these oil wells spew harmful pollution into the air that increase the risk things like asthma and cancer.

The California Independent Petroleum Association disputed those claims. But they decided that "supporters of the energy shutdown can make unfounded claims in the press and in paid advertisements, but they can't make those claims in court without evidence," said Jonathan Gregory, the association's president and the CEO of the oil and gas company RMX Resources.

"That's why we are pivoting from the referendum to a legal strategy," Gregory said.

Supporters took the news as an admission of defeat from the oil industry. In March, they had launched a statewide campaign to support keeping the law, a campaign backed by Arnold Schwarzenegger, Jane Fonda and Gov. Gavin Newsom.

Area of Chicago evacuated after train derailment

CHICAGO (AP) — Emergency officials ordered what turned out to be a relatively brief evacuation after a freight train derailed in suburban Chicago on Thursday.

The Canadian National Railway train derailed in the village of Matteson around 10:30 a.m. The company issued a statement about 1:30 p.m. saying that about 25 cars derailed. There were no reports of fires or injuries, although one car containing "residue liquified petroleum gas" leaked, the company said.

Steve DeJong, a firefighter with a statewide hazardous material response team, said during an afternoon news conference that the substance is commonly known as propane — "just like you'd use in your grill" — and the train was carrying only residual amounts.

Propane is flammable, and emergency responders didn't know how much of it they were dealing with they arrived at the derailment so they ordered a two-block radius evacuated as a precaution, Matteson Mayor Sheila Chalmers-Currin told reporters. The evacuation order applied to up to 300 people, she said.

DeJong said the leak was small and firefighters were able to contain it. The propane that did escape evaporated, dispersing so widely that it didn't register on detectors, he said.

"We are now telling our residents there is no danger to any of them at this time and they can return home," Chalmers-Currin said. "There is no danger. There is nothing toxic that will harm anyone here."

A Federal Railroad Administration spokesman said it had a team on its way to the derailment site to investigate. He didn't have any further details.

Matteson is a village of 19,000 people about 30 miles (48 kilometers) south of Chicago and 27 miles (west of Gary, Indiana. Democratic U.S. Rep. Robin Kelly has a home there.

Dear Abby

Dear Abby: My older daughter, "Brianna," age 42, does not want anything to do with me or her brother and sister-in-law. She keeps me from my granddaughter, who is 17. I have been divorced since the '90s and remarried for 25 years. My first husband was a cheater. I tried very hard to save my first marriage. We got back together six months later, but he walked out again.

When I remarried, Brianna wasn't happy. I have another daughter, age 24, with my current husband. Brianna wants nothing to do with any of us.

I wrote her and said I was sorry for the divorce. She has never mentioned anything about my letter. I have to leave gifts to my granddaughter at the front door. This hurts so bad. Everyone says let them go. I love them so much. What do you think? — Estranged Mom In New Jersey

Dear Mom: I think your granddaughter will be 18 very soon, and an adult. If her mother hasn't diverted those gifts you have been leaving, she knows she has a grandmother who loves her. The ball will be in her court as to whether to make contact with you. (I hope she will.) If, however, she doesn't do that, you are going to have to turn your eyes forward and let her and your daughter live their lives, while you concentrate on what is healthy for YOU.

If you need interaction with younger people, volunteer some time where it will make a difference. If your interests lie elsewhere, devote some of your extra time and effort in that direction. Your pain may lessen if you give yourself less time to dwell on it.

Dear Abby: Several years ago, I began a friendship with a woman at my church. She had children a few years older than my daughter. The friendship seemed mutually satisfying for a long time, although I noticed on many occasions that my friend seemed entitled and demanding where her children were concerned. I overlooked it until it affected me.

I realized over time that she had manipulated and lied to keep my daughter away from hers at teen social events because my daughter had been labeled "annoying."

There was also other deceptive behavior.

These betrayals, combined with realizing that we don't agree on many subjects, has made me lose interest in the friendship. However, she doesn't seem to share my feelings. She still frequently invites me to lunch (which I refuse) and initiates "friendly" conversations.

Confronting her about her behavior would result in denials and a big blowup. How can I bring an end to this fake friendship? — Not Interested In The Midwest

Dear Not Interested: Since you no longer wish to continue to have a relationship with this woman, the quickest way to end it would be to tell her exactly what you have learned about how your daughter was treated and that you feel appalled and betrayed. Whether she "blows up" and denies it is irrelevant.

If you can't bring yourself to confront her, then drag it out by continuing to be "too busy" to see her or to have those "friendly" conversations.

Dear Abby is written by Abigail Van Buren, also known as Jeane Phillips, and was founded by her mother, Pauline Phillips. Write Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069.

Bridge

By PHILIP ALDER

Mark Twain said, "To succeed in life, you need two things: ignorance and confidence."

To succeed in bridge, you need two things: knowledge and confidence.

In today's deal, there are two possible lines of play for declarer.

Which should he choose after West leads the diamond queen against three no-trump?

South's sequence, an artificial and strong two clubs followed by a jump to three no-trump, showed 25 to 27 points and a balanced hand. Here, North had no interest in going higher.

South starts with eight top tricks: two in each suit. He might get the extra winner from either spades or diamonds. Now, it is true that, given the lead, the diamonds are unlikely to be 3-3. But it does not hurt to find out. So declarer ducks the first trick but takes West's diamond-eight continuation in his hand when East discards the heart queen. (Play the top of touching honors when you cannot win the trick.)

There are two ways to get three spade tricks: cash the ace, cross to dummy, and finesse the jack; or play off the ace and king, planning to continue with the jack. Which is better?

The finesse is 51.2 percent (1.2 percent for West's having the singleton queen plus 50 for East's holding the queen).

Playing spades from the top works when the suit is 3-3 or when the queen drops singleton or doubleton. That is about a 60.6 percent chance.

Cause of peripheral neuropathy should be investigated

By MIKE ROIZEN, M.D. AND MEHMET OZ, M.D.

When Sammy Davis Jr. sang "... The rhythm of life is a powerful beat/Puts a tingle in your fingers and a tingle in your feet," he was expressing joy. But for folks with peripheral neuropathy, a tingle in the fingers and feet isn't something to be happy about.

Peripheral neuropathy is nerve damage that causes numbness and pain in the hands and feet. However, it can also affect nerves that control muscle movements and those that affect bladder function, digestion, blood pressure and heart rate. It's a common complication of diabetes and metabolic syndrome. But it also may occur because of a B12 deficiency, an autoimmune disease, injury, infections, restricted blood flow or exposure to significant doses of toxins. Even chronically too-tight shoes or gloves can trigger problems. Unfortunately, a study in Neurology found that three-quarters of folks contending with the condition haven't had a cause identified.

Whatever the cause, nerve signals are being sparked when they shouldn't be and those that should be sent are not. This can lead to infections, falls, and even amputation.

Your smart move: Keep a record of when the sensations arise and when there's tingling or acute pain. Then talk to your doctor about using physical therapy, medication, acupuncture, transcutaneous electrical nerve stimulation, injections or surgery to ease symptoms. And if the cause (diabetes?) is related to lifestyle choices, aim for more physical activity and improved nutrition. And read the iHerb.com blog, "Alpha-Lipoic Acid Might Be Nature's Perfect Antioxidant," to learn how it may help ease your tingling and pain.

Dr. Mike Roizen is the founder of www.longevityplaybook.com, and Dr. Mehmet Oz is global advisor to www.iHerb.com.
