Donations, lobbying reflect influence of oil and gas industry

In recent weeks, Oklahoma's budget stood in limbo for a time as Republicans and Democrats battled over how much to raise and gas wells.

bargaining table: the oil and gas industry.

Oil and gas companies, along with their trade groups, have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in campaign donations to lawmakers over more than two years, with top Republican leaders at the forefront of budget talks taking in some of the largest amounts. Republicans received more than 90 percent of total donations.

In all, sitting lawmakers took in about $683,000 – or about 6 percent of their total campaign donations from January 2015 to March 2017 - from oil and gas companies and trade organizations, their employees and their political action committees, an Oklahoma Watch review of campaign finance and other records found.

The industry's preference for GOP candidates is not surprising given the party's support of oil-and-gas priorities. But it was thrown into sharp relief is term-limited from running during May when Democrats and Republicans fought bitterly over a bid to raise the oil and gas ($15,000) and had one of gas production tax.

employees to oppose the tax increase, spent more than $160,000 on TV ads and dispatched dozens of lobbyists to make its case to lawmakers.

Republican leaders agreed – a harmony in step with the gross production taxes on oil industry's campaign donations.

House Speaker Charles Mc-But a third party was at the Call, R-Atoka, hasn't faced a primary or general election challenger since 2012, but raised more oil and gas money than any other sitting legislator during the 28-month period, according to Oklahoma Ethics Commission filings. The industry gave him $34,000, or 16 percent of his total donations.

His counterpart in the Senate, President Pro Tempore Mike Schulz, R-Altus, wasn't up for re-election in 2016 and again. Yet he took in the ninth highest amount from oil and the largest shares of oil and gas candidates who they believe will favor their viewpoints or bottom lines.

Corporate interests also spread their money around a bit, regardless of party.

Senate Minority Floor Leader John Sparks, D-Norman, received one of the largest shares of oil and gas donations, with about one-fifth of his total of $23,500 coming from the sector.

Aaron Cooper, a spokesman for Schulz, said it isn't surprising that the Senate GOP leader received wide support from those who share his beliefs in "economic development, job creation and conservative, common-sense policies that promote accountability and fiscal responsibility in state government."

But in a budget crisis with millions at stake, oil-and-gas advocates went all out to let those they support know what their position is. Critics argued that core state services are imperiled.

According to Ethics Commission filings since the start of 2015, the average member of the current 145-member Legislature has accepted more than $4,600 from industryconnected donors.

The average Republican took in about $5,400 from oil and gas donors, which represents about 6 percent of their total. The average Democrat took in just under $2,000, or about 3 percent of their contributions.

With both parties, leaders received higher amounts than rank-and-file members.

With McCall and Schulz leading revenue negotiations, Democrats have accused Republicans of catering to the industry's wishes.

Inman, for instance, said Gov. Mary Fallin, McCall and Schulz consulted by phone with Devon Energy co-founder Larry Nichols during a recent budget negotiation meeting with Democrats.

Trump's leadership on the global stage

Congressman Tom Cole

Last week, Donald Trump wrapped up his first foreign trip as President of the United States. In both Saudi Arabia and Israel, the president spoke forcefully of the need for all of America's allies in the region to confront the common enemy of Iran, the largest state sponsor of terrorism in the world. He also concluded one of the largest arms deals in in history in order to strengthen the Saudis and make good on his promise to create jobs in America. The next stop was the Vatican, the headquarters for the world's estimated 1.2 billion Catholics. There the President had a 30 minute audience with Pope Francis who, like President Trump, is known to be an outspoken and blunt advocate for the causes and policies near and dear to his heart. While the President and the Pope have many policy differences, their visit focused on their common objectives of religious tolerance and bringing peace to the world's troubled spots.

members meet that obligation. President Trump argued that the failure of other nations to meet their financial obligations was unfair to the taxpayers of the United States who end up footing the bill for those nations who do not. After the NATO visit, the president met with the G-7 nations to discuss how to speed up growth in the world's largest free economies. He concluded his visit with a speech to America's men and women in uniform, thanking them for their service and reminding the world of the indispensable role our military plays in keeping the peace and defending America and its many allies. Donald Trump came to office unlike any other U.S. President before him. He had never held public office and he had never commanded an army in a major conflict, something that every U.S. President before him has done. Consequently, nobody knew what to expect from his first foreign trip as President. What we saw was a confident president who projected American strength, was unequivocal in his policies, and who, along with First Lady Melania Trump, represented the United States in a way that should not only reassure Americans, it should make us proud.

Oklahoma's two legislatures

Dear Editor,

News flash! Oklahoma has two legislatures. That's right. Contrary to everything you were taught our great state now has two very active law making bodies.

First there is our own well known legislature that just adjourned last Friday following another disastrous session. Like previous ones it further slashed funding for public schools, higher education, health care, public safety and other responsibilities most folks think are important.

Worse, the terrible budget they did create is based on numerous pieces of unconstitutional proposals they dreamed up during the very last week of the session which is in direct violation of the Oklahoma Constitution.

Therefore such silliness requires our second legislature to come into play. It is better known as the Oklahoma Supreme Court and, as usual, this third branch of government will now spend several months, and thousands of your tax dollars, striking down almost all the foolishness disguised as a budget to fund core services.

Unlike our clueless lawmakers the jurists know their jobs well, take them seriously and they also understand the oath of office they sworn to uphold is more than just a bunch of words. It is also the one lawmakers take and routinely violate.

Consequently, and it pains me to say this as a nearly 30year member of the legislature, it probably should just be abolished. Far too many of its members are inept, unwilling to learn, almost always ignore the priorities of the people they claim to represent, spend their spare time eating and drinking from the ample troughs provided by hundreds of well heeled lobbyists and then do their bidding on thousands of pieces of legislation.

It's hard to believe but our own legislature actually makes ish faith.

Trump went on to challenge the assembled nations to help drive terrorism out of their places of worship, their communities and their holy lands.

From Saudi Arabia the president flew to Israel on a flight that was itself historic. It was the first ever direct flight from Saudi Arabia to Israel. While in Israel, President Trump reiter-

AHCA response

Dear Editor,

Response to Tom Cole AHCA, Trump Care.

He says it "protects patients and the economy." He says preexisting conditions will be covered. It is up to each state to decide and insurance premiums would be too expensive.

He says it gives patients "more choices," makes premiums more "affordable and allows states to "tailor" their coverage. He doesn't say it will make 24 million low income folks lose their insurance and is based on age instead of income like the ACA (Obama Care).

A 64-year-old making $26,500 would pay $1,700 in premiums under the ACA, but under Trump Care (AHCA) it would skyrocket to $16,100. Oklahoma has been impacted in a negative way because Gov. Fallin did not take the $900 million in Medicaid. Other states that took it do not have a $1.3 billion shortage.

Obama Care is not in the "down spiral" he says. Insurance companies talk big about leaving, but will not because they like the guaranteed payment from the government. They would just like a bigger payday.

The AHCA is an awful bill and many groups are against it, like the AARP. He says it will "harness market forces to lower premiums." That is just not true. Large insurance companies and big pharm want this to pass because it is good for them and bad for everyone else.

He say it removes "costly taxes from the ACA" and provides "tax credits" for families. The ACA is still a lot cheaper and tax credits are tiny compared to what a hospital stay will cost.

He doesn't mention how the top two percent get millions and millions if this passes. Write and call your elected officials and tell them to vote no on Trump Care.

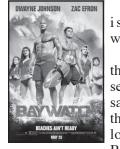

Tom Cole does not have Oklahoma voters best welfare as a priority by supporting Trump Care. He is not being truthful and supports big pharm and large insurance companies over the people who voted for him. Remember where his loyalties are when he runs for re-election.

Nothing on my mind this the attractive cast running whose survival is more based into the reviews.

First up "Bayis watch." Based on the 90s TV series of the same name, this film follows Mitch Buchanan (Dwayne Johnson) the leader of Baywatch, a team of dedicated lifeguards protecting the beach goers of Emerald Bay.

Forced to take on a brash new recruit, Matt Brody (Zac Efron), Mitch and the team have to learn to get along with the newcomer, all while uncovering a plot that threatens to destroy the bay they love.

I really wanted to like this movie.

It has Dwayne Johnson, who's been knocking it out of the park with his roles lately, plus Zac Efron who proved in 2014's "Neighbors" he could pull off comedy pretty dang well despite his pretty boy image.

What I was left with though was a movie so forgettable, I'm struggling to even think of things to write about it.

Johnson isn't bad, in fact he's as charismatic as always, he's just never given much to work with as far as comedy goes. Sure a couple lines may have gotten a chuckle out of me here and there, but for every joke that landed, a dozen Captain Sparrow and the next? Vampires? fell flat.

Welcome to Lennox Valley, mu hometown! Ulterior Motive my hometown! New barber has more than church on his mind Kevin Slimp's The Good Folks of Lennox Valley

After nine days in business in his new hometown, Frank Bell had begun to wonder if he had made the right decision. Business was okay, and local high school students enjoyed having a place to hang out after school. A few had even gotten haircuts.

Living in a place like The Valley had its drawbacks. Teenagers weren't the only residents who couldn't find much to do in our town.

Most activities revolved around churches, and most of those revolved around married couples and families. Other than church functions, entertainment was primarily limited to the few civic clubs in town.

On Wednesday, Frank had something else on his mind – the young Methodist minister who dropped by his barber shop the day before to invite him to her church.

Frank wasn't a regular churchgoer in the big city where he lived before The Valley. In Terra Haute, he worked most days and spent evenings with friends, going to ball games, movies or whatever. That's not to say he never attended church, and in a place like Lennox Valley, chances are he would have made his way into one of the four congregations before too long.

For some reason, Frank couldn't get Rev. Sarah Hyden-Smith off his mind. At 10 a.m., he made the decision to call Sarah and take her up on the offer to visit her church.

He hoped Sarah would remember him from their earlier conversation. "Rev. Smith," remembering what one of the boys called her in the shop on Tuesday, "This is Frank Bell. We met at my barber shop yesterday."

The reminder wasn't necessary. Ministers in small towns aren't as busy as folks often imagine. In Frank's mind, Sarah was hurriedly rushing from one crisis to the next. Perhaps a lost soul was being saved, a dying parishioner was being comforted, or a soul-stirring sermon was being prepared on this ordinary Wednesday morning.

"I was thinking about what you said yesterday, and I think you're right. It would be a good idea for me to visit your church."

'Well, that's wonderful," answered Sarah, not correcting him concerning her name. "Our service is at 11. If you're interested, we have Sunday School at 10.'

Frank had other thoughts. "I was thinking it might be a good idea for me come by the church before Sunday." After a pause, he continued, "so I'll know where to go when I get there.

Sarah cheerfully agreed to meet Frank at the church just after noon. It was a short walk from his shop, which was closed for the traditional lunch hour each day.

Upon his arrival, a quick tour of the church ensued. Frank could now find his way to the sanctuary, the Sunday school room and the fellowship hall, where coffee was served before the worship service.

They each took a seat in the sanctuary, Sarah seated in the pew in front of Frank.

"Do you have a favorite hymn?" she asked, trying to make conversation. Sarah was probably as excited about meeting Frank as he was about meeting her.

She quickly realized his struggle as he tried to come up with a suitable answer.

"I'll bet you're a fan of Charles Wesley," she said. "He wrote so many good ones."

"He sure did," answered Frank, not having any idea who Charles Wesley was. Frank didn't want to lie to his newfound friend, but decided it must be true if she thought so highly of Wesley.

Eventually Frank found the nerve to ask Sarah if she'd like to have lunch with him at the Hoffbrau. It was just 12:20, and he didn't have to be back at the shop at the stroke of 1 p.m. There were advantages to owning a barber shop across the street from the Hoffbrau and one block down from the Methodist Church.

Over lunch, Sarah shared a little about the town and a little about herself. Like Frank, she was from the big city, albeit a little bigger than Terre Haute.

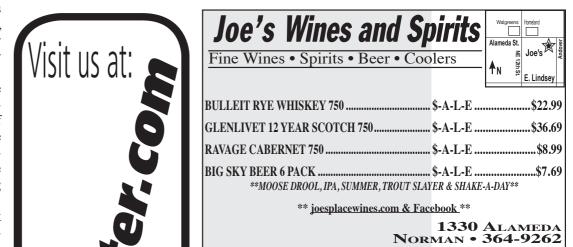

Her hyphenated name was a result of her marriage 12 years earlier. She simply mentioned her husband had "passed away" and left it at that.

Her stories about Raymond Cooper and his run for the mayor's office left Frank in stitches. He thought she was joking, but eventually realized the stories were true.

Like Frank, Sarah was still new to The Valley, having moved just four months earlier. She mentioned it seemed longer, much longer to her.

After a handshake, they parted ways, both silently hoping this would not be the last meal they would share together.

existing wells, but after tedious negotiations said they would settle for a 5 percent rate on wells drilled after July 1.

GOP lawmakers responded by offering 4 percent for new wells. But neither side was willing to budge.

In the end, Republicans decided to back a proposal that wouldn't need Democrats' votes: increasing the rate from 1 percent to 4 percent for horizontal wells drilled between 2011 and 2015. The 4-percent rate lasts for a well's first four years before rising to 7 percent.

The change is expected to raise about $95 million next year. Democrats argued this wasn't enough to address future budget shortfalls because it would generate less money in 2019 and no money afterward.

McCall and Schulz said they have an ideological objection to raising the gross production rate too sharply, and add they have not been swayed by the industry's campaign dollars.

Meanwhile, McCall said the Democrats' 5 percent proposal would lead to the "same type of massive layoffs" that oil and gas experienced 18 months ago when prices plummeted.

"We're in a very fragile economic situation and we don't want to discourage investment and job growth in the state of Oklahoma," he said.

Industry insiders agree.

"When a rig is running, it produces other tax revenue streams, like sales tax, labor income tax, because we're hiring," said Donelle Harder, Oklahoma Oil and Gas Association vice president of communications. "So, the best opportunity for the state to get more money right now is through the act of drilling."

Democrats say the argument doesn't hold up.

Inman said companies would still make a significant profit with a higher tax rate. He pointed to recent comments from Warwick Energy CEO Kate Richard, who said the state's two major oil plays are so rich in oil that they can generate returns of up to 60 percent at just $40 to $50 per barrel, where prices have been this month.

"And (oil and gas compa-

Donations included $50,500 to the Senate Majority Fund, $14,750 to the Republican State House Committee and $27,500 to the Oklahoma State Republican Senatorial Committee. Meanwhile, just $7,500 went to the Democrats of the Oklahoma State Senate. Inman said the oil industry lobby hadn't reached out to him because they already knew where he stood. Instead, they applied that pressure to McCall and Schulz to not alter the tax, he said.

Inman, who received $11,500 in energy-related donations from 2015 to 2017, said he doesn't believe campaign contributions sway votes, but they do come into play during elections.

"I don't know that members in either party really make voting decisions based on who contributed to them," Inman said. "But I think there is fear, especially upon the Republican majority, that if they stand up, (companies) may spend tens of thousands of dollars to oppose them."

Rep. Weldon Watson, R-Tulsa, chair of the House Energy and Natural Resources Committee, said it's no surprise Republicans receive more than Democrats since the GOP has traditionally advocated for deregulation and pro-business policies.

But Watson, a former oil and gas executive who was in charge of his company's PAC spending before he was elected to the Legislature in 2007, said companies look at various factors when deciding where and how much to spend.

In addition to things such as voting records and party affiliation, he said, spending money on incumbents is a priority because they are likely to win re-election.

But he said the donations don't guarantee a candidate will vote the industry's way. Watson said he is proof of this. makers who support increasof oil and gas donations - 26 percent of his total – than any other legislator. But he said he would have supported increasing the gross production tax for new wells, not just the wells drilled between 2011 and 2015.

"I am a very big supporter of energy, and I do believe a low GPT is an incentive," he said. "However, I'm in favor of raising a GPT.

Lobbying Efforts

Campaign contributions aren't the only way the industry leverages its deep pockets to influence the Legislature.

Oil and gas companies and their associations hired at least 49 lobbyists this legislative session, Oklahoma Ethics Commission filings show.

'The reality is they do have a lot of presence at the Capitol," said Rep. Todd Thomsen, R-Ada. "And when you have a lot of presence, it means your message is being told a lot."

The Oklahoma Independent Petroleum Association was active on social media, in some cases targeting individual lawmakers such as House Budget Chairwoman Rep. Leslie Osborn, R-Mustang, who had said she was open to a production tax increase. Some lawmakers called the campaign a bullying tactic.

The group also led a lobbying effort that brought dozens of energy employees to the Capitol on the second-to-last week of the session.

Brought in on a 56-passenger charter bus equipped with reclining seats, Wi-Fi and personal temperature controls, they crowded a fourth-floor hallway holding signs reading "Don't kill Oklahoma jobs' and "I am Oklahoma oil and gas" to make their case against a gross production increase.

The other major oil and gas group, the Oklahoma Oil and Gas Association, launched an advertising campaign encouraging people to contact law-He accepted a greater share ing the gross production tax.

nies) can't afford to give up 3 percent to help a public school child?" Inman asked. "I'm not buying it."

What Campaign Donations Mean

Whether campaign donations directly affect a lawmaker's actions is a matter of debate.

Harder said it is doubtful a lawmaker will ultimately vote a certain way just because they received money from the industry.

She noted many legislators received industry donations but still voted to increase gross production taxes.

"If that money (since then) was influential, I strongly believe these legislators would understand that the industry's been down and out, trying to figure out a new way to operate in the current commodity price environment," she said. "Now that we're creating jobs again, to change the tax rate right now doesn't make good policy sense."

Cantrell, the former petroleum association board member who is chairman of the oil and gas company Cantrell Investments LLC, said the industry's influence expands beyond just donations to individual candidates.

"It's funding the political action committees, so you've got to look at that, too," he said.

In addition to the $683,000 oil and gas companies spent directly on lawmakers' campaigns, they also donated tens of thousands to PACs that support Republican or Democratic lawmakers.

Amanda is dedicated to caring for our residents and enjoys crafting and spending time with her family.

you visit an American War had someone missing in action Cemetery in a foreign country. You see row on row of grave markers. Most with crosses and some with the Star of David. There is a cemetery located near Florence, Italy which contains the graves of 4,398 men and 4 women with a memorial wall listing 1,409 men who were missing in action. There are six sets of brothers with two sets buried side by side. That is almost 6,000 men and women who gave their lives. They left behind families including mothes, fathers, brothers, sisters, wives, children, just south of Norman, 2 miles friends and sweethearts who west of I-35 Exit 106 on the would never see them again. Many of the families only received a telegram from the war department and they were left alone in their sorrow. Many families didn't know how their loved one died. Those who always had some hope their loved one would be found and come home again someday.

Please take time to remember the cost of freedom and the price our veterans have paid to keep us free. If you are a veteran thank you for your service. If you are married to a veteran thank you as well because it's very stressful when you know they are in harms way but you have no idea as to what is happening to them.

Funeral services for Pauline Norma Jean (Allen) Morehead, 89, of Washington were held May 31, 2017 at the Washington First Baptist Church. Interment was at Washington Cemetery under the arrangement of Wilson-Little Funeral Home in Purcell.

Mrs. Morehead passed away Friday, May 26, 2017 at Purcell Municipal Hospital.

Pauline was born May 25, 1928 in Washington, Okla. She was the younger of two daughters born to Eldon Oliver Allen and Effie Mae (Fowler) Allen. Pauline grew up a farm girl, working in the cotton fields near Washington. She graduated from Washington High School with the class of 1946. After high school she remained living at home, helping on the farm and being a caregiver to her family.

On December 10, 1960 she married John Andrew Morehead a local young farmer. They made their home southeast of Washington where they operated a dairy farm for over 35 years. Pauline and John raised one daughter, Lora.

Pauline worked hard as a farmer's wife and mother. She was a wonderful cook and she enjoyed working in her flower gardens around her home. She was an avid collector of rooster and chicken figurines and a longtime member of the Washington Order of Eastern Star.

For over 70 years she has been a member of the Washington First Baptist Church and kept the nursery for nearly 50 years. She wanted the little ones to enjoy coming to church then, so they would enjoy coming to church when they were older. Most of all, Pauline loved babysitting her granddaughter, Kelsie, when she was growing up. She will be greatly missed by her family and friends.

She was preceded in death by her parents, Eldon and Effie Allen; husband, John Morehead in 2006; sister, Iva Aday Vaughn in 2010; and sisters and brothers-in-law, Patty Lynda and LB Collins, Binford Morehead, and Edith and Marvin White.

Ken and Sally loved Kodiak and continued to live there for 23 years before moving to Byars, Oklahoma, in 2003.

Byars gave him the opportunity to live out his dream of being on a farm and being close to Sally's relatives, Bud and Symblene Barr and Doyle and Joan McElwain. He would start anew with his talents and skills to be used for wherever they may have been needed.

KoKoBear Grandpa was the name his grandchildren referred to him because of his Kodiak experience. He and Sally were also hosts of the Country Bed & Breakfast in Kodiak, Alaska, for five years.

alleling Green Avenue between Main and Grant Streets, there are numerous behind-the-scene issues still being dealt with, Bunn said.

These include materials testing, style of concrete and details of the electrical components orders.

"You always wish it would move quicker, but we want it done right," he added.

The contractor is waiting on some electrical products for which there is a long back order. Included are the decorative street lights. Bunn said he expects those are "at least 30 days off."

In the meantime, in some areas there will have to be retaining walls constructed along the new sidewalk.

That sidewalk is being poured on the west side of Green Avenue because terrain on the east side lacked enough room for a sidewalk.

Still, it shouldn't be long before residents see workers removing dirt from the median in anticipation of the next phase.

Crews will also be boring beneath Green Avenue to bring electricity and water to the medians.

Ornamental trees planted in the median between Grant and Ninth Streets will remain.

The contractor on the Green-Scape project is Tri-City Seal in Newcastle.

Most of the veterans we help will receive some type of VA benefits. The most common disability for which veterans receive compensation is hearing loss and tinnitus.

Think a moment about the most important day of your life.

That thought will probably take you to a distant time and to a faraway place. It does me.

It takes me to a little church in west Georgia, at the corner of Fourth and Murphy Avenue. On a Sunday evening, I stepped up at the singing of the invitation song and took ahold of the hand of the greatest preacher I've ever known. My grandfather, E.H. Miller.

I was almost 11 years old at the time. Preacher Miller – as

It was my greatest moment. When I look back at how innocent and sincere I was on that day, unaware of all the many mountains that lay ahead to climb, I have to smile a little.

I love reading about such moments in the life of others, in particular in the life of those in the Bible who meet the Master or hear the gospel and have and brutal and calloused a man as you could find. You'd probably have to go to a prison to find a more calloused man than he. In fact, that's where we meet him.

No, he's not a prisoner. He is the prison guard. And as such, he has heard it all and seen it all. The chance for the gospel to reach such a man is about as great as ... as ... as an earthquake visiting the city of Philippi in the middle of the night.

On this particular night, this cursing jailer has two special prisoners. These are two of the best preachers the world of that day knew, one being the apostle Paul. When they come to the jailer, they are in pitiful shape, having been beaten by the Jewish leaders. This brutish jailer adds insult to their injuries as he roughly thrusts them deep into that inner cell and fastens their feet in stocks as though they are the most dangerous of criminals.

Once those two "religious fanatics" are tended to and the other prisoners told firmly to go to sleep, the jailer leans back to sleep himself.

But he has never heard praying and singing. Nor have the prisoners.
