The news source
for the Upper Delaware River Valley, from Hancock to Port Jervis
on both sides of the river.

Invest in your business — Invest in a growing community

The River Reporter, in its print and online editions, has been the news source for the Upper Delaware River Valley since 1975. A trusted source for community service journalism, the River Reporter is the only news organizations that covers both the Pennsylvania and New York sides of the river.

The Upper Delaware River Region is growing—fast. Realtors in the area cite a massive number of second-home buyers looking to move here year-round, especially since the pandemic.

As young people return to the area to start families and get involved in the community, and new residents move in looking to invest, now is a better time than ever to market to the demographic influx.

If you are looking to support the community, while growing your business, making the River Reporter and riverreporter.com part of your marketing plan is a win-win proposition. Issues are themed and well curated, feature award-winning columnists, thoughtful and diverse opinion and relevant news coverage and public health information.

We're proud of our low advertising rates and our ability to creating a marketing plan for small budgets.
