Harvest Festival ushers in the fall season

Autumn in the Catskills is a beautiful sight. Living in such a splendid and scenic place means we get a front row seat to the changing seasons.

While there are many great places to see fall foliage, the grounds of Bethel Woods Center for the Arts, site of the historic Woodstock Music Festival, is certainly in the conversation for top of the list.

Each fall, Sundays at Bethel Woods usher us into the season, with their Harvest Festival that turns 23 this year.

In addition to a plethora of themed activities for the season, offering family fun, the Harvest Festival also brings together a number of unique vendors offering one-of-a-kind products for your enjoyment.

It also provides a good opportunity to speak with these special vendors about their craft.

If Harvest Festival wasn't exciting enough, Bethel Woods also boasts the Big Sip and Peace, Love and Pumpkins events in October (see more info about each in the pages within this guide).

While fall festivities take center stage, you also shouldn't miss out on an opportunity to visit the Museum at Bethel Woods, which is filled with exciting exhibits and history.

As we've stated in past years, we hope your itinerary takes you over to the corner of Hurd and West Shore Rd. in Bethel this year to enjoy an event that truly captures the rich heritage of our county.

It will be a day well spent.

The Sullivan County Democrat would like to thank Bethel Woods Center for the Arts for their cooperation in producing this section.

On the historic site of the 1969 Woodstock Festival, Bethel Woods is excited to bring back the 23rd annual Harvest Festival, Sunday, August 29 through Sunday, October 3.

The six-Sundays event brings back all of the classic Harvest Festival favorites. Over 95 vendors will be in attendance at the farmers' market each Sunday, selling fresh fruits and vegetables. A food truck court and live music will entertain visitors from near and far.

Welcome back the season of autumn with corn mazes, seasonal crafts, and other special offerings. Each Sunday, the upper campus of Bethel Woods transforms. Each week has a specific event or theme, such as the Rosehaven Alpaca tent on Week 2 and Week 6 introduces Catskill Fiber, an event showcasing the multiple fiber farms across the region.

"Lots of our vendors are returning fan favorites," said Bethel Woods Director of Marketing Emily Casey. "Vendors such as Buddhapesto usually sell out long before the day is over."

Harvest Festival is excited to continue their support of local farmers and artisans, as they introduce people to the flavors and friendliness of the Catskills. Admission is free to the event, but there is a $5 parking fee. Pets are not allowed inside the festival.

While safety precautions are of the utmost importance to the Harvest Festival, many missed favorites will return after two years.

Tastings, music, and other traditional Harvest Festival festivities will be back. Guests who are fully-vaccinated are not required to wear a mask. Guests who are unvaccinated are required to wear a mask.

Also, the Art of Wellness Outdoor Series will offer visitors a way to practice well-being of the body and mind prior to the opening of the farmers' market. A rotation of yoga classes, body flow, and sound meditation conducted by local instructors are $15 per session and run from 10 a.m. to 11 a.m. Yoga attendees who attend the Harvest Festival that day will receive complimentary parking by showing their same-day yoga ticket.

In association with the Bethel Woods Museum, a special exhibit will run alongside the Harvest Festival until the end of the year. Lights, Color, Fashion: Psychedelic Posters and Patterns of 1960s San Francisco, showcases multiple rock posters and fashions gathered by collector Gary Westford. Slated to open spring 2020 but delayed due to COVID, the museum is happy to finally welcome the "light at the end of the tunnel" for their programing.

With six Sundays full of fun fall activities, live entertainment, and a surreal amount of farm fresh food, there's something for everyone at this year's Harvest Festival.
