Summer is always special

As we embark on yet another new season in the Sullivan Catskills, I find myself reflecting on my two decades of experience here. Each season brings with it newfound excitement, brimming with fresh developments and thrilling activities. My team is ready and eager to ensure this season will be filled with unforgettable experiences. They're here to guide you through the latest attractions, weekend events, and offer personalized suggestions to craft a custom itinerary just for you.

One of the highlights is our immensely popular Dove Trail, which will feature 80 doves by July. With new programs, contests, and brochures, the Dove Trail will feel brand new – even for those who have explored it before. Get ready to be amazed by the colorful and creative art installations that make each visit unique.

New businesses are sprouting up across the Catskills, bringing with them a wave of creativity and innovation. These aren't your run-of-the-mill establishments; they're crafted with imagination and flair by both locals and new investors. For those seeking luxury and adventure, we offer some of the finest glamping experiences. Check out Unique Escapes Domes in the Town of Thompson or the Luxury Domes at Catskills Swan Lake. You can even stay in treehouses at Chatel Lodge, where camping meets character and comfort.

Pair your luxurious stay with an exciting experience at the Monticello Motor Club, the only luxury automotive club of its kind. They offer everything from a two-hour course to a full day on the track as well as a Kids summer camp, allowing you to live out your race car driver dreams. If theater is more your style, we have a vibrant entertainment scene, with new summer season performances showcasing an array of creativity that will captivate all audiences.

Whether you're exploring new trails, indulging in luxurious accommodations, savoring culinary delights, or enjoying our vibrant events, there's something for everyone to enjoy. Our team is here to make sure you have a memorable time, filled with adventures that last a lifetime. Visit www.sullivancatskills.com for info on events and new happenings.

The Salsa Shack on Route 97 in Long Eddy just recently opened again for its fourth season, and we've been hearing so much about it that we decided to check it out for ourselves.

A big, colorful sign along the road lets you know where to turn, and as your tires hit the gravel drive you can see brightly colored umbrellas in the distance with the heart of the Salsa Shack just behind - where the food magic happens.

Walking over and choosing a place to sit, smiling faces are quick to greet you - Susan, Alex, and Michelle.

The three have been friends for as long as they can remember, previously owning a property in New Jersey together, and then deciding to embark on a new journey here in the Catskills together too.

"They're both like my sisters," said Michelle. "We had been looking for land for years, all of us kind of wanting to get out of where we were, and when we first saw this property it was so overgrown the only thing we could really make out was the pond, but we knew this was it.”

Having been in the restaurant business for years, Michelle also had a place of her own in Edgewater, New Jersey called Salsa, so when the three of them officially moved up to Long Eddy, starting the Salsa Shack just seemed like the right next step.

A peek at the menu will have you excited for TexMex comforts like Quesadillas or Nachos Supreme served with a scoop of salsa and sour cream. Tasty Burritos from simple Mission Burritos to steak burritos, shrimp, and veggie, to burger burritos or chicken. You can chow down on Fajitas or Sandwiches, munch on loaded salads like the Black Bean Salad, or grab a few sides to share like guacamole and chips or Mexican rice. No matter what you choose, your taste buds will surely be singing with delight.

If you don't have time to hang out and let the kids play while you eat, you can order ahead and pick up takeout.

“It's been really wonderful to see the amount of regulars that are here every weekend, or the people who grab takeout on their lunch breaks,” said Alex. “We even have some of our Salsa people that travel up from New Jersey every so often.”

One of the best parts of the Salsa Shack is getting to stare out at the pond, watch the Heron fly in, or catch a glimpse of the shy beavers on the other side while waiting for your food.

So stroll in, take a seat, and enjoy a “Burrito with a View.”

story by Autumn Schanil

in celebration of the Catskills heyday

The Catskills Mountains have always been a paradise to the people born and raised in its lush green forests and fields, and plentiful rivers and lakes, and for the last century, the Catskills have been both a refuge and vacation destination for others.

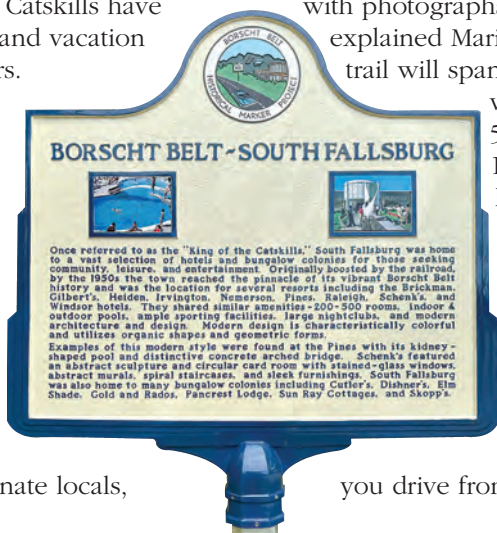

Part of that rich history is known as The Borscht Belt Era, and in an attempt to not let it fade into mere memory like many of the buildings and hotels that once thrived, Marisa Sheinfeld and a small team of dedicated, passionate locals, artists and historians created The Borscht Belt Historical Marker Project.

“Our mission is the creation of a large-scale interpretive historic marker trail of 20 dual-sided markers enhanced with photographs and QR codes,” explained Marisa. “The historic trail will span the towns and villages where over 500 documented Borscht Belt hotels and 50,000 bungalows once thrived.”

When complete, the trail will be complimented with a self-guided audio tour that you can listen to as you drive from marker to marker, hearing a segment of its history. The marker project is especially close to Marisa's heart as her family has been coming to the Catskills since the 1920s. "My parents moved up to Sullivan County in 1985 from Brooklyn. They had come up here in the summers with their parents, and with their parent's parents," she said. "Fast forward to me as a kid, we were living in Kiamasha Lake when the Concord Hotel was still open as well as Kutchers. I ended up working as a lifeguard at the Concord right before it closed."

Marisa then went on to college in Albany to study photography, and Grad School in California.

"In Grad School I was really stuck with what I wanted to say with my work, but a mentor of mine gave me really great advice. He said, 'when you don't know what to shoot, shoot what you know.' So I took that to heart, knowing this county and this place that I grew up in had this really vibrant history - hotels and bungalows that catered to the Jewish community," she said, "and what they offered - leisure, entertainment, culture, tradition, community, friendship, and love - and it was all set against the beauty of the Catskills."

As Marisa started exploring more of the Borscht Belt and learned why it was created, she became more passionate and inspired. She continued to question what her story was, and realized that her story is other people's story too, not just the people who came to visit but the locals who are proud of the rich history of the area as well. She began to photograph the ruins of the hotels and bungalows, eventually publishing a book called "The Borscht Belt."

"It's a photography, coffee table book with about 130 images and three essays in it. I was really fortunate to be able to speak about the book and in 2018 I was approached by The Jewish American Society for Historic Preservation - a man named Jerry. He is a philanthropist and has installed historic markers all over the country, as well as abroad, in places where Jewish history has occurred," Marisa explained. "He offered to fund a trail of 20. He had previously come up and pitched the idea to some of the towns, and although they loved it, they didn't take it on as it was a big project."

Jerry ended up contacting local county historian John Conway who suggested getting in touch with Marisa. The pandemic came about shortly after and things were put on hold until the summer of 2022 when Jerry called Marisa and asked if she was ready.

The first marker was placed in Monticello the following May, in 2023, who don't know about it, and with people who don't know its depth," Marisa stated. "From the 1920s to about the 1970s this was a place for mostly American with markers in Fallsburg, Mountaintale, Swan Lake, and South Fallsburg following shortly after. Another marker will be placed in Parksville next summer.

"Our real goal is just to share the rich history of the Borscht Belt with people

Jews to vacation, but everyone was welcome. The Borscht Belt was not excluding, it was a welcome center because the Jews recognized that they were excluded. What I find fascinating and beautiful is that in the face of adversity not only did they create a vacation destination but they created a space that culturally and creatively was a training ground for so many comedians, writers, singers, and artists.”

People like Mel Brooks, Joan Rivers, Jerry Seinfeld and dozens more got their start in the Catskills thanks to the Borscht Belt. It inspired Las Vegas and even influenced movies and TV.

Marisa and her team will be hosting five dedications just this summer alone to celebrate each marker.

Their next event will be July 21 in Hurleyville. You can visit borschtbelthistoricalmarkerproject.org for more information.
