watching eagles watching

story by Autumn Schanil

Each year we like to dedicate a page of the Winter issue to the Bald Eagle. In part because they're more easily spotted in our region at this time (during the months of December through March), but also to bring attention to how powerful and important this raptor is, along with the ongoing importance of protecting them so they continue to thrive off of the endangered species list.

There are more than 60 species of eagles found throughout the world, but only two are found in North America, the Bald Eagle of course being one of them. They can weigh up to 15 pounds and are generally between 28-38 inches in size. Their wingspan can reach up to seven and a half feet compared to an osprey's wingspan of six feet or a red-tailed hawk's nearly five feet.

It's this large wingspan that enables them to soar for long periods without ever flapping their wings, and at great heights, often soaring 10,000 feet or more into the air using thermal air currents to support them and conserve energy.

Because they glide high above the ground, one thing they need for catching prey is impeccable eyesight. A Bald Eagle's eyesight is nearly eight times stronger than ours. They can spot a small animal two miles away with incredible clarity and have a 340-degree field of view.

The Delaware Highlands Conservancy has an Eagle Watch program that offers information about eagles and their habitat, as well as proper eagle etiquette for safe eagle viewing. They run bus tours in January and February through the Upper Delaware River region where you can look for, and learn about, eagles while staying warm! Seats are limited so advance reservations are required.

For more information or to make reservations visit delawarehighlands.org. You can also call the PA office at 570-226-3164 or the NY office at 845-583-1010.

With their incredible eyesight, the eagles may just be watching you, watch them.

“While we were helping, a ceramicist and good friend of ours who had her studio here, sent a message that she was making the move back to the city and needed help breaking down some of the things inside the space,” explained A.J.

So with tools in hand, they took apart her kiln, shelves, tables etc., and as they were finishing up A.J. happened to look at the front window where sunlight was streaming in and told husband, Chris, to look too.

“I told him that I thought this would be the perfect place for a plant store,” smiled A.J.

Within a week of getting in touch with the landlord back in February of 2024, A.J. and Chris were signing the lease.

where earthly pleasures grow

story and photos
by Autumn Schanil

Wine and plants. Both grow from the Earth, the ground, the land. Plants require nurturing, just as wine production demands careful cultivation of vineyards.

This was the thinking behind Terra Space, a unique and fun shop on Main Street in Jeffersonville offering educational wine tastings, diverse hard-to-find houseplants, ceramics, curated home goods, and more importantly - a space to grow.

For years, A.J. Ojeda-Pons and husband, Chris, frequently traveled to the Catskills from New York City visiting family in Fremont Center, before deciding to make the move themselves. They bought a house in Jeffersonville just in time to help their family and friends prepare to open Sullivan Sundries, just a few steps down from where Terra Space now resides.

Terra Space offers a comfortable setting not only to taste wines you may have never tried before but to learn about the region they come from, the production process, and even the texture of the Earth they grow in.

With A.J.'s extensive background in wine as a prominent sommelier, educator, and consultant along with Chris' background in the botanical and horticultural world, Terra Space came together.

You can book private wine tastings at Terra, or at your home, or purchase tickets on their website for the weekly planned wine tasting classes where you are brought on a journey through the vibrant flavors of Spain, explore the sun-kissed vineyards of Italy, or perhaps Bordeaux. Each wine tasting is different, and they take place in an unpretentious space of comfort surrounded by plants and beauty.

"You have to let the wine speak for itself," noted A.J. "Here in America, we have the tendency to validate or judge wine before we've even tasted it, and we tend to stick to things we know. In doing so, we limit ourselves, that's why the blind tastings are so powerful. We may fall in love with a flavor, or a subtle note of a wine that we may have never tried because of what's on the label."

As it states on their website, Terra Space is all of the fabulous things for fabulous people who want to grow.

You can purchase succulents, cacti, ferns, pothos, and other desired houseplants along with unique pots and planters from local artists when you visit, or book your next wine tasting.

go for a glide

From bones to blades, as a past form of necessary transportation to a current sport in the Olympics, humans have been ice skating for thousands of years. Not only does it improve upon our balance and coordination while enhancing our cardiovascular health, it's also just a lot of fun.

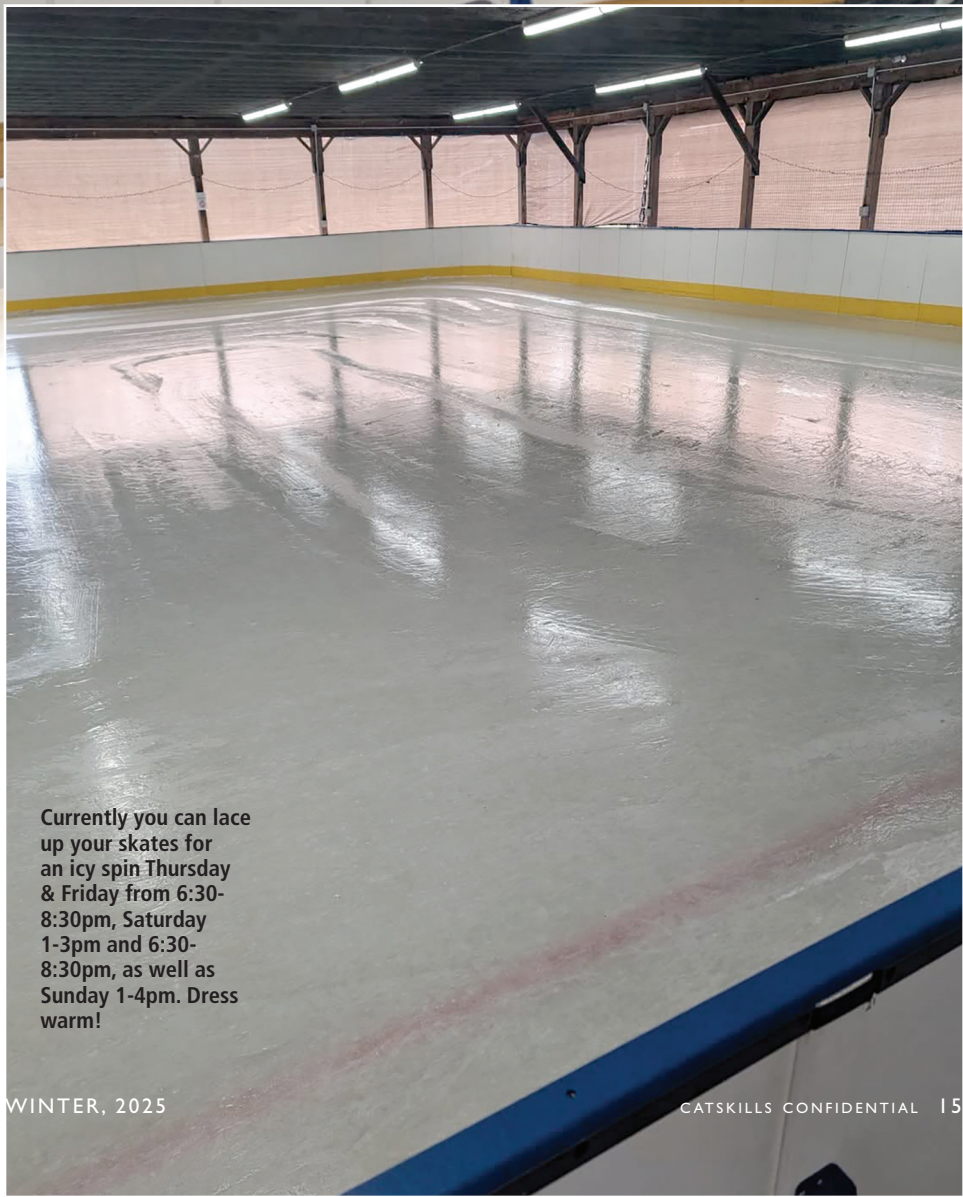

The Town of Neversink Parks and Recreation Department offers a classic skating experience at their ice rink located at the Grahamsville Fairgrounds. The time schedule, run by volunteers and the local community, offers skating times from Thursday through Sunday.

Everyone on the ice must wear a helmet, so either bring your own or borrow one when you get there. Skates are available at the rink if you don't have your own, but they are limited.

Donations of skates and helmets are much appreciated and always welcome.

For the ice skating schedule or updates to the schedule, please check the Town of Neversink Parks and Recreation Department Facebook page.

Currently you can lace up your skates for an icy spin Thursday & Friday from 6:30-8:30pm, Saturday 1-3pm and 6:30-8:30pm, as well as Sunday 1-4pm. Dress warm!
