ASD survey suggests community opposed to bond

Only 3% of survey population responded

By PRISCILLA WAGGONER

Courier Reporter ALAMOSA - Slightly more than two weeks ago, 6,784 households in the Alamosa School District received a survey in the mail. Titled as a "Community Update and Survey," respondents were asked six questions related to the district putting a bond measure on the November ballot. Out of those 6,784 surveys sent out, only 274 surveys were completed, two of which were in Spanish. Among those 274 respondents, there was not overwhelming support for the bond measure with 58% being definitely or probably opposed and 38% being definitely or probably in favor. The remaining respondents were unsure. The measure would ask voters to approve a $28 million bond, funding that would address maintenance issues that have been deferred for, in some cases, a number of years but simply can't be resident and former business professor at Adams State University, Gerald Lester Corning, passed away on Wednesday, May 22, 2024, in Arvada, Colo. Gerald or "Jerry" was born May 13, 1943, in a train depot in Dickens, Neb., to Lester and Hilda (Goodrow) Corning. His Dad was a telegrapher for the railroad which led the family to relocate often, including to Paoli, Colo., where Jerry played basketball and graduated from Haxtun High School. Jerry returned to Lincoln, Neb., to continue his education and ended up meeting his wife Susanne (Sukovaty). The two made their way back to Colorado, eventually settling in Alamosa where Jerry taught Accounting at Adams State for 35 years before his retirement in 2009. He enjoyed his profession and the numerous students he taught during those years and felt honored when a scholarship was later endowed in his name. Along with his passion for teaching, Jerry's longtime hobby was that of an amateur ham radio operator where he operated under the call sign K0MT. His children can still remember the sound of his keyer as he used Morris Code to send dits and dahs to people all around the world...in all hours of the day and night! Jerry was always trying to improve upon his signal reach. One time he even roped his kids into wiring pop cans together and erecting a very tall homemade aluminum tower.

Following retirement, Jerry moved to the Denver area to be closer to his wife, kids, grandkids, and his own mother until her passing at 103 years young! He enjoyed fishing, playing Yahtzee, watching sports on tv, eating at restaurants. playing Bingo and buying wild t-shirts at the thrift store. His five grandchildren saw many funny faces, were given lots of bunny ears, and could often get a few bucks from him if ever they asked. Those he left will miss his sense of humor, his intellect. and his companionship. Gerald is survived by children Michelle Straight (Greg), Blair (Becky Dil-Corning lon), and Tammy Glasby grandchildren (Trent). Chloe, Bella, Sophia, Holden, and Braelyn, his sister-in-law, and numerous nieces and nephews.

He was preceded in death by his parents Lester and Hilda, his broth-Raymond Corning (Mary Reichardt Corning Jones), sister Bonnie Harms, his wife Susanne, son Travis Corning, and nephew Gary Harms

A celebration of Jerry's life with food, drink, and song will be held 11 a.m., July 7, 2024, at the Faversham Park Lake Pavilion at 6109 W. 73rd Ave., Westminster, CO 80003. Former students, friends, and family are all welcome to attend.

of Josie Montoya Silva and the late Joe Silva Sr. He was a devoted husband to his wife, Keylenz, and a loving father to his children, Clayton Comstock, Christopher Comstock, Jocelyn Comstock, Jeremy Silva, and Joshua Silva. Joe's joy was multiplied by the laughter of his grandchildren, Olivia, Asher, Tommy, and Matthew. His sisters, Becky (Jim) Vannoy, Sandra and her husband Orville Drevland, and Lisa Silva, will remember him as the protective and caring brother who was always there for them.

Joe was preceded in death by his father, Joe Silva Sr., and his sister, Lori Mcguire.

Joe's legacy is one of love and service. For over 30 years, he owned and operated his own concrete construction business, contributing to the growth and development of the San Luis Valley with his skilled craftsmanship. His work stands as a testament to his dedication to his community and his pride in a job well done. Joe's colleagues and clients knew him as a man of integrity, always willing to go the extra mile to ensure the satisfaction of those he served.

Joe was a man of the outdoors. His passion for hunting and fishing was only matched by his knowledge of the best spots in Colorado to enjoy these pursuits. He found solace and joy in the tranquility of nature, often sharing these moments with friends and family. Joe's love for the land extended to his ranch, where he cared for his cows and sheep with the same tenderness he showed to his loved ones. Joe's selfless nature was evident in his commitment to the Capulin Fire Department, where volunteered since 1998. His bravery and willingness to help others in their time of need earned him the respect and admiration of his fellow firefighters and the community at large. Joe's generosity knew no bounds, and he was always the first to offer a helping hand to anyone

Joe cherished the time spent with his children, whether it was target shooting or simply enjoying each other's company. His grandchildren were the light of his life, and he took every opportunity to spoil them with ice cream treats and his undivided

RGH Wellness Center ribbon cutting ceremony set for June 22

By LYNDSIE FERRELL DEL NORTE — After almost a year of construction, the Rio Grande Hospital Wellness Center will be officially opening to the public, patients and staff on Saturday, June 22. The center has been part of a long-time dream of the hospital and the greater San Luis Valley. "We want this facility to

However, unlike the traditional yoga meditation pose, where the hands are closed or face down on her lap, McCoy made her head look upward with her hands open. He made this change because he wanted to show the symbolism that this young lady is being open and ready to receive inspiration, revelation, guidance, direction, and change.

This little gesture has a big meaning behind it. Mc-Coy has placed all sorts of symbolisms throughout this art piece and McCoy thinks it will be interesting to see what people will notice each time they see his finished work.

In his discussion, Aldrich made it clear that there were about 20 local contractors with the skill to be involved in the project and, while construction is ongoing, the courtyard will be used as the "lay down" for materials, minimizing any obstruction around the property with an emphasis on keeping the sidewalks along 4th Street and San Juan passable as well as the alleys. While the timing of the purchase of the building may have been fortuitous for Valley-Wide, given how the organization is growing, it may also have been extremely so for the building, itself, which Massie said was "already showing signs of blight."

Against that backdrop, not to mention a real step in revitalizing downtown Alamosa, the historic courthouse serving as a new facility for Valley-Wide can only be looked at as a win-win for all involved.

Massie also shared an interesting fact that only adds to the historic feel of the project.

In examining the building's structure, it was discovered that materials from the railroad were also used in its construction, including at least one railroad tie that serves as a support beam. Woodwork around the tie helps it to aesthetically blend in completing this extraordiwith surrounding wood.

An ugly tower threatens Bears Ears National Monument

Writers On

The Range

My Navajo homeland is the great expanse of land between four sacred mountains in Arizona, New Mexico, Colorado and Utah.

It is our place of origin and Navajo spiritual traditions are rooted here. Even when we were forcibly removed from our homeland by the federal government's

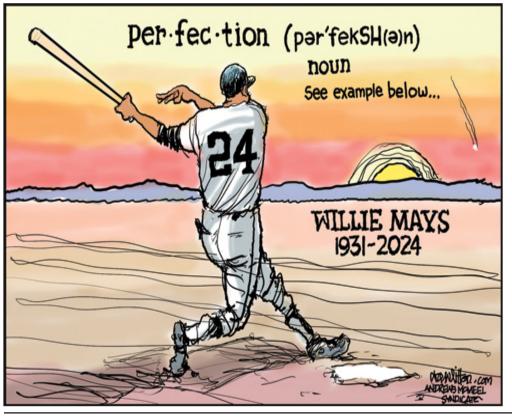

Mark Maryboy

Army in the 19th century, our spiritual and cultural connection to these lands has never been extinguished. Utah Navajos still make use of this historic homeland, which is now known as the 1.35-million-acre Bears Ears National Monument, designated by President Obama in 2016. It is where we practice our ceremonies; gather herbs, firewood and cedar poles; hunt for game; rejuvenate our spirits and caretake our sacred places. Because the monument closely involves us, Navajo and other tribes in the area have been pushing for tribal management.

For many years, the Navajo and other local tribes — Hopi, Uintah, Ouray Ute, Zuni and Ute Mountain Ute — worked together to gain federal protection for this land. But what we gained is now threatened by developments that defile and dishonor the cultural and spiritual significance held by Navajo and other Native peoples.

The most recent example is the plan to build a 460-foot telecommunications tower on a parcel of land owned by a Utah state agency, the Trust Lands Administration. The land that would house the tower is in the heart of the Bears Ears National Monument.

If erected, this alien-looking tower will be a spear in the heart of the Bears Ears area. I am also saddened to think there will likely be more inappropriate developments on Utah Trust Lands within Bears Ears, now that the state has derailed a proposed land exchange between the Trust Lands Administration and the federal government.

The land exchange would have helped ensure that Navajo homelands are managed to protect our cultural and spiritual traditions. Now these lands — our heritage — face death by a thousand cuts.

The company placing the telecommunications tower has applied for and received a conditional use permit from San Juan County. But the company must also apply for and receive a variance from the county, because any tower higher than 35 feet is prohibited. So far, it has not applied for a variance.

The National Park Service opposes the tower and has submitted comments to both the Utah Trust Lands Administration and San Juan County. The federal agency said the tower would blight the viewshed, diminish the area's dark skies, and harm habitat for several threatened and endangered bird species.

For more than a century my people have had to fight for our rights. In 1868, when Navajos were finally allowed to return from forced exile, we were confined to a reservation south of the San Juan River. It was much reduced in size from our original homeland. The prime lands higher up near the water and lush vegetation of Bears Ears were denied us. Nevertheless, these lands have always been a part of our cultural traditions, despite a documented history of racial injustices levied against Utah Navajos.

At every level, from county to state to the federal government, that history includes violations of voting rights, education and civil rights. All had to be litigated in federal court. Through all of that, Utah Navajos have fought to conserve

Otherwise, more out-of-place and inharmonious developments such as this 460-foot blinking tower could come to dominate the Bears Ears landscape.

As far as I'm concerned, they can't put warning labels on social media websites soon enough. Indeed, I'd go a lot further. I'd consider banning smartphones altogether for children under Me, I'm so old I can remember when what Vice President Al Gore called "the information superhighway" was going to usher in a new Golden Age of enlightenment and democratic well-being.

Instead, we got flat-earth theorists, high school boys sending "dick pics" to girls in their geometry class, porn addiction and MAGA. Turns out that most people, adolescents in particular, don't need (and certainly haven't got the critical thinking skills to cope with) the veritable tsunami of titillation, disinformation and delusion that comes pouring in over the internet.

I was recently shocked to learn from a friend who's a high school teacher that her students are permitted to bring cellphones to class. What can educators responsible for this situation have been thinking? They may as well shut down classes altogether. There's no chance of getting and keeping high school kids' attention with the accursed things buzzing in their pockets.

Back in my own school days, teachers pretended they were unaware of boys carrying transistor radios during the World Series, but that was a special circumstance -- not smutty videos or digitally created nude photos of our female classmates.

If we had any sense as a culture, we'd recognize that putting smartphones in the hands of children and adolescents makes about as much sense as handing out whiskey sours in the school cafete-

According to a recent article in The

Put the phones away

Washington Post, "research finds a correlation between cellphone use and lower grades and test scores." How could it be otherwise? Furthermore, "a recent Gallup poll shows teens spend an average of nearly five hours a day just on social media -- not including games and texts. A report by Common Sense Media finds teens check their phones an average of more than 100 times a day."

Social scientist Jonathan Haidt, who has made a personal crusade out of warning against what he sees as the Academic achievement began to slide dire effects of cellphone addiction, noted: "I recently surveyed my students at NYU, and most of them reported that the very first thing they do when they open their eyes in the morning is check their texts, direct messages and socialmedia feeds. It's also the last thing they do before they close their eyes at night."

Some think Haidt has contributed to what one academic critic calls a "moral panic" scaring parents needlessly. He counters by pointing to studies showing that the typical American adolescent "now gets 237 notifications a day, roughly 15 every waking hour."

I'm sorry, but that's crazy.

And crazy-making, too. According to Surgeon General Vivek Murthy, writing in The New York Times: "The mental health crisis among young people is an emergency -- and social media has emerged as an important contributor. Adolescents who spend more than three hours a day on social media face double the risk of anxiety and depression symptoms, and the average daily use in this age group, as of the summer of 2023, was 4.8 hours. Additionally, nearly half of adolescents say social media makes them feel worse about their bodies.'

It's not just in the United States, either. Haidt has pointed out the skyrocketing rates of adolescent depression and suicide -- they rose more than 50% between 2010 and 2019, when widespread smartphone use began. "Similar patterns emerged around the same time in Canada, the U.K., Australia, New Zealand, the Nordic countries, and beyond," he said.

Basically, anywhere the wonders of the information superhighway were bestowed willy-nilly upon the young. around the same time. It's gotten to where a teenager reading a book is a rare phenomenon. We're raising a semi-literate generation. No wonder they're so easily bamboozled by Russian propaganda.

Nobody meant for these things to happen, but by encouraging nearuniversal cellphone usage among the young, with social media algorithms designed to lure users ever deeper into the online world, we've been conducting a vast, uncontrolled social experiment with unforeseen results upon the most vulnerable members of society.

Skeptics point to other potential causes -- financial panics, mass school shootings and active shooter drills, the COVID pandemic, the opioid crisis, even global climate change. But while these events might have been contributing factors in some countries, none can explain both the timing and international scope of the disaster.

The good news is that the damage can be reversed if we have the will. Washington Post columnist Kate Cohen writes of visiting a high school near Albany where cellphones have been banned to nearly everybody's satisfaction -- including students', many of whom say they're relieved not to have to deal with the constant intrusion.

Suffocated girlfriend finally calls it quits

DEAR ABBY: My girlfriend and I broke up after six years. Both of us have children from marriages that ended seven years ago. We reached a point a year and a half ago and started looking for a house together. After realizing we couldn't afford what she wanted in a home for our blended family, our relationship became strained. The last year

As she suffered through job loss and other outside forces affecting her mental health, I tried to offer her more support, but she felt suffocated. I am sometimes too intense trying to find solutions, even when she says she needs space. I have not kept up my end of giving her space.

We have had the best connection of our lives, so seeing her in pain has me distraught. She says she isn't able to give what I need in our relationship, while I have strived to be a good teammate in her times of need. Now she says she is done because I didn't give her space. She is the love of my life.

What do I do during this crushing and devastating time of my life? -- DAZED IN NORŤH CAROLINA

DEAR DAZED: I'm sorry things didn't turn out better for you. You and your girlfriend have very different communication styles. She wanted to vent and be heard. You felt compelled to find solutions to her problems. When someone says they "need space," it often means the person feels pushed or smothered. It can also mean they want to dial back the relationship or may have met someone else.

Right now, your next step should be a giant one BACKWARD. Increase your exercise schedule, spend time with friends and do not sit around alone and brooding over something you can't change. IF the two of you manage to get together again, I urge you to get into couples counseling so this kind of heartbreak doesn't happen again. DEAR ABBY: Several months ago, I let the 49-year-old son of a dear friend move into my basement. "Jason" pays me rent plus utilities.

Last week, he informed me that he is not vaccinated for COVID. He was drinking at the time. Since my husband passed away with COVID in his system two years ago, I told Jason he would need to get vaccinated or find another place to live, but now I'm not sure he remembers the conversa-

ate his mother (or him, whom I love like a son) over this. -- HEALTH-CONSCIOUS IN COLO-RADO

DEAR HEALTH-CONSCIOUS: Ask Jason if he remembers the conversation you had in which he mentioned that he has not been vaccinated for COVID. If he doesn't recall having made the statement, remind him. Then tell him that when your husband passed, he had COVID in his system, that you do NOT want to risk being exposed to COVID and that if he wishes to continue living with you, he will have to stay current on his vaccines. This need not be a confrontation if you approach the subject calmly.
